| The competence of the Supreme Administrative Court of Poland on disputes that have an economic impact derives from the Act of 30 August 2002 – Law on Proceedings before Administrative Courts (Journal of Laws of the Republic of Poland (2024, item 935, consolidated text, as amended). According to its art. 3 (1) and (2), administrative courts shall exercise review of the activity of public administration and use the methods specified by statute. The review of the activity of public administration by administrative courts shall include adjudicating on appeals in cases against, among others, administrative decisions, written interpretations of tax law issued in individual cases, local enactments issued by local government authorities and territorial agencies of government administration. As long as the questions referred to the Supreme Administrative Court concern the public-law legality of administrative action, the Court remains competent, even when the case has an economic impact. |

| Administrative courts are competent to rule on disputes concerning only the legality of the concession award. That is, when the dispute concerns: the decision or act of a public authority selecting the concessionaire, exclusion of an operator, refusal to grant a concession, annulment of the concession procedure, breach of transparency, equality, or competition rules. These acts are: public-law acts, adopted in the exercise of public authority (imperium), subject to judicial review of legality.                                                                                                  |

| A25. Please specify in which cases and explain your functions, particularly with regard to reviewing the legality of administrative decisions concerning the authorisation of redundancies or the validation of employment protection plans.The SAC of Poland is competent in public-law employment matters, when the case concerns employment in the public sector and only in terms of legality, i.e.:1. Cases concerning employment based on an administrative act, e.g.: appointment or nomination to public service, decision to establish, refuse to establish, or terminate an employment relationship. Examples: - civil service, - police, border guard, - state fire service, - army, - prison service, - state or local government officials employed on the basis of appointment.The dispute concerns the legality of an administrative decision, so an appeal may be lodged in the regional administrative court.2. Cases concerning access to public employment (recruitment stage): refusal to admit to service, negative recruitment results, violation of recruitment rules (equality, transparency), provided that the decision is of a public law nature.3. Cases concerning unemployment, i.e. status of unemployed person, unemployment benefits.4. Cases concerning employment of foreigners. |

Yes

D4. Are there statutory caps or fee limits for SAC cases?

Yes

D5. Please explain.

Fees to initiate a case before the SAC are set up in the Act of Parliament of 30 August 2002 Law on proceedings before administrative courts and in the Regulation of the Council of Ministers of 16 December, 2003 on the amount of and detailed principles for collecting filing fees in proceedings before administrative courts. The filing fee of the cassation appeal amounts to half of the filing fee for bringing an application before the court of first instance, however, not less than 100 PLN (approx. 24 EUR) and no more than 50 000 PLN (approx. 12 000 EUR). In certain types of cases, an applicant is not obliged to pay a fee (in both first and second instance), e.g. in cases concerning the status of unemployed, benefits and other allowances and rights conferred to the unemployed or in cases resulting from labour relations and official subordination.

| Legal aid may be granted to a party upon request submitted before the commencement of proceedings or during proceedings. This request is free of court fees. Legal aid covers exemption from court costs and the appointment of a lawyer, legal advisor, tax advisor, or patent attorney. Legal aid may be granted in full or in part. Full legal aid covers exemption from court costs and the appointment of a lawyer, legal advisor, tax advisor, or patent attorney. Partial legal aid covers exemption only from court fees in whole or in part, or only from expenses, or from court fees and expenses, or covers only the appointment of a lawyer, legal advisor, tax advisor, or patent attorney. Legal aid is granted to a natural person: 1) in full - if the person proves that they are unable to bear any costs of the proceedings; 2) partially - if they demonstrate that they are unable to bear the full costs of the proceedings without prejudice to the necessary maintenance of themselves and their family. A legal person or other organizational unit without legal personality may be granted legal aid: 1) in full - if it proves that it has no means to bear any costs of the proceedings; 2) in part - if it proves that it does not have sufficient means to bear the full costs of the proceedings. |

| In the Turkish legal system, contracts to which the administration is a party are classified into two sub-categories, namely administrative contracts and private law contracts of the administration. For instance, contracts concluded pursuant to the general public procurement legislation are regarded as private law contracts and disputes arising from the performance of such contracts fall within the jurisdiction of the judicial courts, whereas disputes relating to the procurement (tender) procedure fall within the jurisdiction of the administrative courts. Moreover, where a contract is characterised as an administrative contract, disputes relating to all stages thereof fall within the jurisdiction of the administrative courts. Examples of administrative contracts include concession agreements, electricity market system usage agreements, and water usage right agreements. |

INSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURE AND SPECIALIZATION

B1. If your court deals with business-related cases or cases of economic importance, it acts...

Sometimes as a court of appeal and sometimes as a court of first and last instance

B2. Please explain.

As a rule, our Chamber acts as a court of appeal and, in its capacity as a court of first instance, examines disputes arising from actions brought against regulatory acts and Presidential decisions applied nationwide within its field of competence.

B3. Are there specialised chambers or thematic divisions for business-related cases or cases of economic importance in your court?

Yes

B5. Are there any special rules regarding the case assignment to individual judges for business-related cases or cases of economic importance (based on their case-load, backlog, experience etc.)?

N/A

B7. Does your court provide any training for judges?

Yes

B9[SQ001]. How is the training carried out? [Internally (in-house training)]

Yes

B9[SQ002]. How is the training carried out? [Externally (training agencies, universities etc.)]

No

B10. Does the training include specific non-legal skills such as technical matters, financial matters, or other business-related matters?

No

B11. Is the training limited to or intended for certain (groups of) judges?

Yes

B12. Please explain.

Training sessions are provided on a thematic basis and, except for scientific symposiums, are intended solely for specific judges.

B13. Do the judges have the opportunity to be provided with more assistance in order to deal with business-related cases or cases of economic importance?

Yes

| Under this procedure, in respect of public procurement disputes, the time limits for bringing an action and for submitting a response to the statement of claim are restricted, the case file is completed upon a single defense, and a decision must be rendered within a shorter and fixed period compared to the general judicial procedure. All procedural acts relating to the investigation are carried out expeditiously. There is no intermediate appellate stage in these cases, and the decisions are brought directly before the Council of State on appeal. With certain exceptions, in these cases the Chamber is not confined to quashing the decision but may rule on the merits by substituting itself for the lower court, and such decision is final. Privatization matters are heard by our Chamber as a court of first instance, and the same procedures apply to such cases. Following an appeal against these decisions, the Plenary Session of the Administrative Law Chambers may render a decision in place of our Chamber. |

| Le Conseil d'État jouit d'une compétence subsidiaire pour contrôler les actes adoptés par les autorités administratives. Le caractère subsidiaire de cette compétence découle de la formulation même de l'article 14, § 1er, 1° des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État, qui dispose que le Conseil d'État est compétent "[s]i le contentieux n'est pas attribué par la loi à une autre juridiction". Ainsi, la loi peut explicitement attribuer à d'autres juridictions - judiciaires ou administratives - les litiges portant pourtant sur des actes administratifs adoptés par des autorités administratives. La compétence du Conseil d'État est également limitée par la théorie "de l'objet véritable et direct du recours" qui repose sur une interprétation bien établie de l'article 144 de la Constitution par la Cour de cassation. Selon cette théorie, le Conseil d'État est sans juridiction lorsque, sous couvert d'un recours en annulation, le demandeur sollicite en réalité la reconnaissance d'un droit subjectif correspondant à une compétence liée dans le chef de l'administration. Il en va ainsi lorsque l'autorité administrative ne dispose d'aucune marge d'appréciation et doit, dès que les conditions légales ou réglementaires sont remplies, appliquer la norme et prendre la décision prescrite par celle-ci. En revanche, en ce qui concerne les recours portés contre des marchés publics, la compétence du Conseil d'État est déterminée en fonction de la nature publique ou privée de l'autorité adjudicatrice. Cette condition d'attribution de compétence est la conséquence des articles 24 et 56 de la loi du 17 juin 2013 'relative à la motivation, à l'information et aux voies de recours en matière de marchés publics, de certains marchés de travaux, de fournitures et de services et de concessions' qui disposent que l'instance de recours compétente est le Conseil d'État "lorsque l'autorité adjudicatrice est une autorité visée à l'article 14, § 1er, des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État" alors qu'il s'agit du juge judiciaire "lorsque l'autorité adjudicatrice n'est pas une autorité visée à l'article 14, § 1er, des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État." Par conséquent, le Conseil d'État n'est compétent que si l'autorité adjudicatrice est une autorité administrative. |

| La compétence du Conseil d'État est limitée aux actes administratifs unilatéraux détachables du contrat. La théorie de l'acte administratif unilatéral détachable du contrat est une construction jurisprudentielle permettant d'extraire, de la phase de conclusion d'un contrat public, certains actes unilatéraux (par exemple la décision d'attribution) pour les soumettre au recours en annulation devant le Conseil d'État, alors même que le contrat en lui-même est un acte bilatéral qui échappe à sa compétence.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| Dans ces contentieux, le Conseil d'État est compétent soit en premier et dernier ressort (contentieux de l'annulation) soit en tant que juge de cassation administrative.Dans le contentieux de l'annulation, l'objet du recours est un acte adopté par une autorité administrative. Dans le contentieux de la cassation, l'objet du recours est une décision adoptée par une juridiction administrative.Ces deux types de procédures peuvent parfois concerner une même matière. Ainsi, le contentieux de l'aménagement du territoire est traité tantôt en annulation, tantôt en cassation en fonction de la réglementation fédérale ou régionale applicable. Cette disparité s'explique notamment par la création, par le législateur de la Région flamande, de juridictions administratives de première instance qui sont compétentes en matière d'aménagement du territoire et d'environnement. |

| Yes                                                                                                                                                       |
| B16. Has your court already applied such a mechanism?                                                                                                     |
| Yes                                                                                                                                                       |
| B17. Does your court have a legal tool to act as a court of first instance for large-scale or urgent cases?                                               |
| Yes                                                                                                                                                       |
| B18. Does your court have a legal tool to fast-track (prioritize) business-related cases or cases of economic importance?                                 |
| Yes                                                                                                                                                       |

B19. Is the use of such a legal tool limited to certain categories of cases?

Yes

B20. Please explain.

Le Conseil d'État connaît trois procédures spécifiques permettant de traiter en priorité certains contentieux à caractère commercial ou présentant un intérêt économique.

La première concerne le traitement des recours en suspension dirigés contre les décisions d'attribution de marchés publics. L'article 15 de la 'loi du 17 juin 2013 relative à la motivation, à l'information et aux voies de recours en matière de marchés publics [...] dispose que ces demandes de suspension doivent être introduites selon la procédure d'extrême urgence tout en précisant que la décision pourra être suspendue "sans que la preuve de l'urgence doive être apportée". Cette particularité déroge à la procédure ordinaire concernant les demandes de suspension.

La deuxième concerne le traitement des dossiers relevant d'un intérêt public supérieur (IPS). Ces dossiers sont identifiés par l'article 101/1 des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État et par l'article 2 de l'arrêté royal du 21 juillet 2023 'déterminant les affaires relevant d'un intérêt public supérieur et les possibles mesures organisationnelles de ces affaires au sens de l'article 101/1, alinéa 2, des lois sur le Conseil d'Etat, coordonnées le 12 janvier 1973'. Ceux-ci concernent, d'une manière générale, les permis, les autorisations, et les plans qui concernent des installations et des infrastructures importantes en matière de transition énergétique. Pour assurer le traitement rapide ces dossiers, qui doivent en principe être traités dans un délai de 15 mois, le collège des chefs de corps du Conseil d'État a adopté une mesure organisationnelle permettant à la chambre saisie d'une telle affaire de décider, par ordonnance, que les délais dont disposent les parties pour déposer leurs actes de procédure seront réduits.

Enfin, l'arrêté royal du 15 mai 2003 'portant règlement de la procédure accélérée en cas de recours après du Conseil d'État contre certaines décisions de la Commission bancaire et financière (aujourd'hui FSMA)' instaure une procédure spécifique pour le traitement des recours portant sur certaines décisions de la FSMA (Autorité des services et marchés financiers) et de la Banque Nationale de Belgique. Cette procédure est caractérisée par des délais de procédure contraignants pour le Conseil d'État (transmission de la requête à la partie adverse, dépôt du rapport de l'auditeur et fixation de l'audience), un délai réduit pour le dépôt du mémoire en réponse par la partie adverse et par l'absence d'échange de derniers mémoires par les parties après la communication du rapport de l'auditorat.

| Le Conseil d'État connaît trois procédures spécifiques permettant de traiter en priorité certains contentieux à caractère commercial ou présentant un intérêt économique. La première concerne le traitement des recours en suspension dirigés contre les décisions d'attribution de marchés publics. L'article 15 de la 'loi du 17 juin 2013 relative à la motivation, à l'information et aux voies de recours en matière de marchés publics [...] dispose que ces demandes de suspension doivent être introduites selon la procédure d'extrême urgence tout en précisant que la décision pourra être suspendue "sans que la preuve de l'urgence doive être apportée". Cette particularité déroge à la procédure ordinaire concernant les demandes de suspension. La deuxième concerne le traitement des dossiers relevant d'un intérêt public supérieur (IPS). Ces dossiers sont identifiés par l'article 101/1 des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État et par l'article 2 de l'arrêté royal du 21 juillet 2023 'déterminant les affaires relevant d'un intérêt public supérieur et les possibles mesures organisationnelles de ces affaires au sens de l'article 101/1, alinéa 2, des lois sur le Conseil d'Etat, coordonnées le 12 janvier 1973'. Ceux-ci concernent, d'une manière générale, les permis, les autorisations, et les plans qui concernent des installations et des infrastructures importantes en matière de transition énergétique. Pour assurer le traitement rapide ces dossiers, qui doivent en principe être traités dans un délai de 15 mois, le collège des chefs de corps du Conseil d'État a adopté une mesure organisationnelle permettant à la chambre saisie d'une telle affaire de décider, par ordonnance, que les délais dont disposent les parties pour déposer leurs actes de procédure seront réduits. Enfin, l'arrêté royal du 15 mai 2003 'portant règlement de la procédure accélérée en cas de recours après du Conseil d'État contre certaines décisions de la Commission bancaire et financière (aujourd'hui FSMA)' instaure une procédure spécifique pour le traitement des recours portant sur certaines décisions de la FSMA (Autorité des services et marchés financiers) et de la Banque Nationale de Belgique. Cette procédure est caractérisée par des délais de procédure contraignants pour le Conseil d'État (transmission de la requête à la partie adverse, dépôt du rapport de l'auditeur et fixation de l'audience), un délai réduit pour le dépôt du mémoire en réponse par la partie adverse et par l'absence d'échange de derniers mémoires par les parties après la communication du rapport de l'auditorat. |

| La durée pour laquelle les mesures provisoires sont imposées varie en fonction de l'effet utile que celles-ci doivent atteindre. Ainsi, si la suspension d'un acte administratif sera en principe appliquée jusqu'à la fin de la procédure au fond, une mesure provisoire telle que l'obligation pour un établissement d'enseignement de laisser un étudiant participer à une session d'examens ne sera d'application que pour la durée nécessaire à ce que l'effet utile poursuivi soit atteint. |

| L'article 78 de l'arrêté du Régent renvoie aux articles 667 à 669 du Code judiciaire pour déterminer si une personne peut bénéficier ou non de l'assistance judiciaire. En application de ces dispositions, le Conseil d'État accorde le bénéfice de l'assistance judiciaire à toute personne de nationalité belge qui justifie de moyens d'existence insuffisants. Il l'accorde également, dans les mêmes conditions : a) aux étrangers, conformément aux traités internationaux; b) aux ressortissants d'un État membre du Conseil de l'Europe; c) à tout étranger qui a sa résidence habituelle en Belgique ou dans un État membre de l'Union européenne. Ces dispositions ne prévoient pas explicitement si elles s'appliquent ou non aux personnes morales. Toutefois, le Conseil d'État s'appuie sur les arrêts 143/2016 du 17 novembre 2016 et 167/2016 du 22 décembre 2016 de la Cour constitutionnelle - qui ont jugé que les dispositions du Code judiciaire "violent les articles 10 et 11 de la Constitution, lus en combinaison avec l'article 6.3, c), de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme en ce qu'ils excluent de l'aide juridique de deuxième ligne la personne morale poursuivie pénalement dont les ressources sont insuffisantes" - pour accorder l'assistance judiciaire aux personnes morales. Il faut encore préciser que l'assistance judiciaire - qui permet d'être dispensé des frais liés à la procédure - se distingue de l'aide juridique de deuxième ligne qui permet d'obtenir gratuitement l'assistance d'un avocat. Le bénéfice tant de l'assistance judiciaire que de l'aide juridique n'est octroyé qu'aux personnes qui sont en mesure de démontrer qu'elles disposent de moyens d'existence insuffisants. Les différentes manières dont l'absence de moyens suffisants peut être prouvée sont énumérées aux articles 508/13/1 et 508/13/2 du Code judiciaire. Ces dispositions instaurent également des cas dans lesquels l'absence de moyens d'existence suffisants est présumée. Tel est par exemple le cas des personnes détenues ainsi que des étrangers pour les procédures concernant leur présence sur le territoire. À titre d'exemple d'application de ces dispositions par le Conseil d'État, on peut mentionner l'arrêt 259.805 du 21 mai 2024 par lequel le Conseil d'État refuse d'octroyer l'assistance judiciaire à une société de nationalité kirghize non pas au motif qu'il s'agit d'une personne morale, mais au motif qu'elle ne rentre dans aucune des catégories de personnes étrangères dont il est question à l'article 78 de l'arrêté du Régent lu en combinaison avec l'article 668 du Code judiciaire. |

D9. Please explain and provide examples.

L'article 14ter des lois coordonnées sur le Conseil d'État permet au juge de moduler les effets de l'annulation de l'acte administratif.

Cette disposition se lit comme suit : "À la demande d'une partie adverse ou intervenante, et si la section du contentieux administratif l'estime nécessaire, elle indique ceux des effets des actes individuels annulés ou, par voie de dispositions générales, ceux des effets des règlements annulés, qui doivent être considérés comme définitifs ou maintenus provisoirement pour le délai qu'elle détermine.

La mesure visée à l'alinéa 1er ne peut être ordonnée que pour des raisons exceptionnelles justifiant de porter atteinte au principe de légalité, par une décision spécialement motivée sur ce point et après un débat contradictoire. Cette décision peut tenir compte des intérêts des tiers."

À titre d'exemples d'application de l'article 14ter, on peut mentionner :

1) l'arrêt 252.484 du 20 décembre 2021. Par cet arrêt, le Conseil d'État maintient pour le passé et pour une durée de trois ans à compter de son prononcé, les effets du permis unique permettant l'exploitation d'une activité de recyclage du verre. Le maintien des effets est notamment motivé par "l'impact économique" et "la perte significative d'emplois directs" que l'annulation pure et simple de l'acte attaqué entraînerait.

2) l'arrêt 255.508 du 17 janvier 2023. Par cet arrêt, le Conseil d'État a maintenu, pour le passé uniquement, les effets d'un règlement communal de stationnement qui, au moment de son annulation, avait été appliqué pendant plus de deux ans. Le maintien des effets est justifié à la fois par la charge budgétaire que représenterait pour la commune le remboursement des amendes infligées en application du règlement (plus de 11 millions d'euros) et par la charge administrative qu'impliquerait le réexamen de chaque constat d'infraction en matière de stationnement.

Outre le mécanisme de l'article 14ter des lois coordonnées, les articles 15, troisième alinéa, et 47, troisième alinéa, de la loi du 17 juin 2013 'relative à la motivation, à l'information et aux voies de recours en matière de marchés publics [...] permettent au Conseil d'État, saisi d'une demande de suspension de la décision d'attribution d'un marché public, de "d'office ou à la demande de l'une des parties, tenir compte des conséquences probables de la suspension de l'exécution et des mesures provisoires pour tous les intérêts susceptibles d'être lésés, ainsi que de l'intérêt public, et peut décider de ne pas accorder la suspension de l'exécution ou les mesures provisoires lorsque leurs conséquences négatives pourraient l'emporter sur leurs avantages."

D16. Please explain.

Le mécanisme du maintien des effets des actes annulés, décrit en réponse à la question D.9 entraîne une forme d'absence d'application de l'arrêt d'annulation, dès lors que le Conseil d'État peut décider de maintenir certains des effets de l'acte annulé pour la période qu'il détermine.

Lorsque le maintien des effets vaut pour la période antérieure à l'arrêt d'annulation, il doit être considéré comme définitif, les effets de l'acte annulé étant définitivement maintenus pour le passé. En revanche, lorsque le Conseil d'État décide de maintenir certains effets pour l'avenir, il ne le fait que pour la période qu'il fixe. En ce sens, les effets de l'acte annulé sont provisoirement maintenus pour l'avenir.

À titre d'exemple, on peut mentionner l'arrêt 142.753 du 1<sup>er</sup> avril 2005 qui annule un arrêté relatif à la profession de géomètre-expert. Cet arrêt maintient les effets de l'arrêté annulé à la fois en considérant comme définitif les diplômes d'ores et déjà acquis en son application (maintien des effets définitif pour le passé) et maintient également les effets de l'acte annulé jusqu'à une date postérieure au prononcé de l'arrêt afin de ne pas affecter l'année d'étude en cours (maintien des effets provisoire pour l'avenir).

| The competence of the Department of Administrative Cases of the Supreme Court of Latvia (SAC) is based on the public-law nature of the dispute and the legal issues involved. It depends on whether a public authority acted in the exercise of public power, whether the case concerns administrative law questions, and whether the dispute arises from an administrative activity. |
| A3. Please illustrate.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Public procurement dispute. A company challenges a decision of a public authority in a public procurement procedure. The dispute concerns an administrative act by a public authority, so it falls under jurisdiction of administrative court and may reach the SAC on legal issues.                                                                                                  |
| Tax assessment case. A business disputes a tax authority's decision imposing additional tax. The case arises from an administrative activity (taxation) and raises administrative law questions, so the SAC may review it in cassation.                                                                                                                                               |
| Environmental permit for a factory. A company challenges the refusal of an environmental permit. The refusal is an administrative decision affecting business activity, so the SAC may rule on points of law related to the permit procedure.                                                                                                                                         |
| Purely private contract dispute. Two companies disagree over a commercial contract, with no public authority involved. This is a private-law dispute, not an administrative one, so the SAC is not competent to rule this case, even if the financial stakes are high.                                                                                                                |

| 1. Urban planning authorization. A company wants to build a small shopping center on a plot of land. The municipality denies the building permit, claiming the land is zoned only for residential use. The company believes the denial is unlawful and takes the case to the administrative court. In such case the administrative court examines whether the municipality acted according to the law, whether zoning rules were applied correctly, and whether the applicant's rights were respected. 2. Commercial authorization. An entrepreneur applies for a license to open a cafe. The local authority refuses, citing incomplete documentation. The applicant argues that the documents were sufficient under the law and challenges the refusal in court. In this case the administrative court checks if the authority followed proper procedures and applied the law correctly in granting or refusing the commercial license. 3. Health authorization. A pharmacy wants to operate in a new location, but the health authority rejects the application, claiming the area already has enough pharmacies. The business contests the decision. In this case the administrative court assesses whether the health authority acted within the law, whether the criteria for approving or rejecting the license were applied correctly, and whether the business's rights were considered. |

| In public procurement cases, administrative acts may be appealed to the Administrative District Court, which examines the case in a panel of three judges. The decision of the Administrative District Court in public procurement cases may be appealed directly by way of cassation to the Administrative Cases Department of the Supreme Court. This means that for these categories of cases, there is no intermediate appellate instance. A similar procedure applies to cases related to public-private partnerships (concession agreements). Similarly, decisions of the Competition Council (for example, a decision on the merger of market participants) may be appealed by a party to the Administrative Regional Court, which examines the case as a court of first instance in a panel of three judges. The decision of the Administrative Regional Court may be appealed by way of cassation to the Department of Administrative Cases of the Supreme Court. |

| The basis for applying interim measures is the fulfilment of two cumulative criteria. First, the court must find that, if interim measures are not applied, significant harm or loss may occur, and that preventing or compensating for such harm or loss would be substantially difficult or would require disproportionate resources (the subjective criterion). Second, the court must find that the contested decision is prima facie unlawful (the objective criterion). If either the subjective or the objective criterion is not met, the request for the application of interim measures must be refused. |

| According to Article 129.2 of the Administrative Procedure Law, a security deposit is not payable by persons who are exempt from the payment of the state fee under the law. In addition, upon the request of a natural person and having regard to that person's financial situation, the court may fully or partially exempt the person from the payment of the security deposit. When taking a decision, the court shall take into account whether other applications, complaints, or requests submitted by that person to the administrative court during the previous three years have repeatedly been refused acceptance, refused examination, left without examination, or dismissed. |

| Generally the administrative court does not base its decisions on broad economic outcomes or effects in the abstract sense. Under the Administrative Procedure Law, courts in administrative matters are mandated to assess the lawfulness of administrative acts and actions, applying established legal principles and checking whether public authorities have acted within the scope of their powers and followed procedural requirements. The focus is on legal compliance and rights protection, not on abstract assessments of economic consequences. However in certain cases - especially in competition law, regulatory decisions, or market-related disputes - evidence about economic effects may be relevant to determine whether a specific legal standard has been met (e.g., market impact under competition law). |

| All the elements mentioned above influence the jurisdiction of the administrative judge over matters with an economic impact. First and foremost, the public nature (or public participation) of certain major economic activities is significant, as is the role of large-scale public service concessionaires. Furthermore, the nature of the issue itself is undoubtedly relevant, particularly regarding those critical matters over which the administrative judge exercises exclusive jurisdiction. Finally, there are fields where administrative activity directly affects market dynamics and competition; examples include market regulation (such as appeals against sanctions or regulations issued by Independent Authorities, like the AGCM for Antitrust or ARERA for energy), as well as public procurement and concessions. |

| Jurisdiction over public contracts disputes belongs to the Administrative Court for the entire public tendering phase prior to the signing of the contract, including challenges to calls for tenders, exclusions, and awards as expressions of authoritative power, whereas once the contract is signed, jurisdiction generally shifts to the Ordinary Court for disputes regarding the performance of the legal relationship on equal terms, except for specific cases of exclusive administrative jurisdiction such as disputes over price revision or the declaration of contract ineffectiveness following the annulment of the award.                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| Jurisdiction over public procurement disputes belongs to the Administrative Court for the entire public tendering phase prior to the signing of the contract, including challenges to calls for tenders, exclusions, and awards as expressions of authoritative power, whereas once the contract is signed, jurisdiction generally shifts to the Ordinary Court for disputes regarding the performance of the legal relationship on equal terms, except for specific cases of exclusive administrative jurisdiction such as disputes over price revision or the declaration of contract ineffectiveness following the annulment of the award.                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| The Court exercises jurisdiction over disputes concerning authorizations with economic value whenever a private party challenges the exercise of discretionary power by the Public Administration, as occurs in the construction sector regarding the challenge of denied building permits or authorizations granted to third parties that impair property value, in the commercial licensing sector regarding the denial of licenses or failure to comply with territorial planning criteria for large-scale retail facilities, and in the healthcare sector regarding the accreditation procedures for private facilities or the allocation of regional budgets.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| Jurisdiction over intellectual and industrial property matters primarily belongs to the ordinary courts, which rule through specialized business sections on all disputes concerning the validity, ownership, or infringement of trademarks, patents, and copyrights. However the administrative court intervenes when the dispute does not directly concern the subjective right of exclusivity, but rather the legitimacy of an authoritative measure issued by the public administration, as occurs in challenges against Antitrust Authority sanctions for unfair commercial practices or in proceedings regarding the right of access to tender documents where the administration must balance the duty of transparency with the protection of the technical and trade secrets of the participating companies.              |

| Public employment is divided into privatized personnel, whose relationship is governed by civil law and collective bargaining agreements, and non-privatized personnel, who remain under a public law regime; consequently, jurisdiction is split between the ordinary court acting as a labor judge, which handles disputes concerning contractualized staff regarding the management of the individual employment relationship, and the administrative court, which retains competence over public competitive recruitment procedures for all employees and holds exclusive jurisdiction over the entire employment relationship of personnel under public law status, such as judges, military personnel, and university professors, who remain regulated by public law norms due to the institutional functions they perform. |

| In the field of managing employment crises, the jurisdiction of the administrative court does not concern the validity of individual redundancies, but rather the legality of the authoritative measures through which the State intervenes in the market, as occurs in the extraordinary administration procedures of large companies in crisis where the judge reviews ministerial decrees approving restructuring plans or authorizations for the sale of business assets, and it extends to the review of the lawfulness of decrees granting strategic social safety nets, verifying that the administration has complied with legal requirements and the standards of proportionality in balancing the protection of employment levels with the needs for production continuity.                                             |

| Italian administrative justice has specific tools to accelerate the resolution of disputes of economic importance, most notably the "shortened procedure" provided for by Art. 119 of the Code of Administrative Trial, which halves procedural deadlines for sensitive matters such as public procurement, strategic infrastructures, and measures by Independent Authorities; this mechanism is complemented by the possibility of obtaining immediate decisions on the merits during precautionary hearings via a "simplified judgement", thereby ensuring a rapid judicial response that balances the protection of business interests with the need for speed in administrative action. |

PROCEDURAL TOOLS TO ENHANCE EFFICIENCY

Please explain how such a procedure operates.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| The effectiveness of judicial protection in the economic sphere is guaranteed by the synergy between Art. 119 of the Code of Administrative Trial, which introduces a general shortened procedure based on the halving of almost all procedural deadlines for strategic sectors (Independent Authorities, energy, infrastructure), and Art. 120 of the Code of Administrative Trial, which extends this acceleration to the public procurement and concessions sector. This latter regulation establishes an even stricter regime.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

| Artificial intelligence applications are currently used in support of judicial and administrative activities within the Business Intelligence and Artificial Intelligence Platform of the Administrative Justice system, which has been developed internally by the Administration and is intended for widespread deployment across all judicial offices.AI applications perform an exclusively auxiliary and supportive function and do not in any way affect the decision-making activity of judges. In particular, the implemented use cases concern:– the identification of similar or related appeals, with a view to optimising work organisation and preventing inconsistent decisions;– advanced case-law research, based on semantic relationships rather than solely on keyword searches;– the extraction and visualisation of statutory and case-law references contained in pleadings and other submissions;– support for the anonymisation of decisions, without prejudice to verification and validation by the Registry Offices.All AI tools are trained exclusively on internal data, are integrated with the Administrative Justice Information System, and are designed in accordance with a strict governance framework ensuring traceability, human oversight and the integrity of processes.The use of generative AI systems for the drafting of texts or for decision-making purposes is expressly excluded |

| The Italian system does not provide for absolute statutory caps on professional fees (the principle of contractual autonomy applies), but it strictly regulates judicial costs through the Contributo Unificato (court fee). The allocation of costs against the losing party is instead based on the values defined by Ministerial Decree 55/2014, which the judge may increase or decrease based on the complexity of the litigation. |

| The Italian administrative judge is sometimes required to evaluate the economic repercussions of their decisions. Through the balancing of interests in precautionary proceedings and the application of Articles 121 and 122 Code of Administrative Trial in procurement matters, the judge assesses whether the annulment of an act might cause disproportionate prejudice to the public interest or the continuity of essential services. In such scenarios, the system allows for maintaining the effectiveness of illegal contracts in the presence of "imperative reasons", prioritizing economic stability and the completion of strategic works, while providing for alternative sanctions to restore the violated legality. |

| The Council of State consistently integrates the assessment of impacts on third parties and the market into its legal reasoning. For example, through the balancing of interests provided for by Art. 55 Code of Administrative Trial, the judge may require the provision of a security or guarantee to ensure that the execution (or suspension) of a measure does not cause irreversible economic harm.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

| The Supreme Administrative Court mainly hears exceptional appeals against decisions of the Central Administrative Courts (appeal courts). In the case of the tax law chamber, it also hears ordinary appeals when only a question of law is at issue. Exceptionally, it also hears ordinary appeals in the administrative law chamber when the appeal is limited to a question of law. There may be an appeal per saltum from the first instance to the Supreme Administrative Court in these cases. This ensures that Portugal has only one ordinary appeal route for administrative and tax disputes, speeding up proceedings regardless of the subject matter of the dispute. Administrative and tax courts have jurisdiction over legal relationships that are regulated by administrative law. Examples include fundamental rights and interests that are legally protected in the context of legal-administrative and tax relationships; supervision of the legality of administrative acts; interpretation, validity and enforcement of administrative contracts; public employment; and the contractual and non-contractual civil liability of administrative entities. For example, if the case concerns an industrial investment relating to water supply or waste collection services, the Supreme Administrative Court would never have jurisdiction, as consumer legal relationships involving essential services do not fall within the administrative courts' jurisdiction (judgment of the Court of Conflicts of 25 June 2025, case no. 015/25.6YFLSB-CP). Otherwise, if an investor holds securities managed by a banking institution that has been subject to a bank resolution measure, and they sue the bank and the resolution authority for not having access to their capital without questioning the legality of the resolution authority's actions, jurisdiction lies with the civil courts (judgment of the Court of Conflicts of 7 February 2024, case no. 016/23). The Supreme Administrative Court also has jurisdiction to hear disputes concerning the legality of administrative acts performed by higher state entities and bodies at first instance. These include the President of the Republic, the Assembly of the Republic and its President, the Council of Ministers, the Prime Minister, the Constitutional Court, the Supreme Administrative Court, the Court of Auditors, the Superior Council of National Defence, the Superior Council of Administrative and Tax Courts and its President, the Prosecutor General of the Republic and the Superior Council of the Public Prosecution Service. On 25 January 2024, the Supreme Administrative Court ruled (case no. 02614/23.1BELSB) that this competence extends beyond the core functions of these entities to include ancillary activities such as public procurement. |

| In order to set up an agri-food industry in an urban area, the Land Use Plan (Municipal Master Plan) must allow for this in the relevant area. If the industry is to be located in a rural area, a special plan (protected area plans) or a sectoral instrument (legal regime for agricultural reserves) must not prohibit such an establishment. Construction of industrial buildings is subject to a licence from the Legal Regime for Urbanisation and Construction (Decree-Law No. 555/99 of 16 December). Industrial facilities are licensed under the Responsible Industry System regime (Decree-Law No. 169/2012 of 1 August). For an agri-food industry such as a milk processing plant, the industrial licensing procedure must also include authorisation from the Directorate-General for Food and Veterinary Affairs under Regulation (EC) No. 852/2004. In a ruling dated 8 June 2000 (case no. 043952), the Supreme Administrative Court considered that, although locating a bakery was valid, if licensing the construction of the facility was found invalid, this invalidity would transfer to the industrial licence. In some cases, investors request prior information on the feasibility of installing an industrial unit. In a ruling dated 11 December 2003 (case no. 1523/03), the Supreme Administrative Court ruled that, when the information states that the licence depends on conditions such as authorisation from neighbours, civil liability for frustrated expectations does not arise if the subsequent licence is appealed. |

| The Supreme Administrative Court has jurisdiction over appeals relating to judicial decisions on price regulations imposed on private operators of essential services, provided that these regulations result from administrative acts or decisions made by independent regulatory authorities. Typically, price regulation for essential services stems from tariff regulations, and administrative courts have jurisdiction to hear cases questioning the legality of such rules, even when they are technical in nature. It is more doubtful, however, whether administrative courts can be competent to hear government decisions adopted in the form of regulations that impose limits or alter the tariff rules approved by independent regulatory authorities. An example of this occurred in Portugal with the measures implementing Decree-Law No. 237-B/2006 of 18 December, which, contrary to European law, established the tariff deficit mechanism in the electricity sector.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

| In Portugal, it is common practice for concession contracts to include arbitration clauses. This means that any disputes arising during the performance of the contract, including those concerning its interpretation, must be submitted to ad hoc administrative arbitration. These 'ad hoc arbitration tribunals' are recognised in general terms by Article 209(2) of the Portuguese Constitution, and the idea that they are equally legitimate and useful in resolving disputes governed by administrative law has spread through legal doctrine, even though their regime is not that of administrative procedural law, but rather that of voluntary arbitration law (Law No. 63/2011 of 14 December, which corresponds to the legal regime for commercial arbitration). Indeed, when the Portuguese state, the International Monetary Fund, the European Commission and the European Central Bank signed the memorandum of understanding in May 2011, the aim was to balance public accounts and increase competitiveness in Portugal — a necessary condition for the €78 billion loan. Through the Memorandum of Economic and Financial Policies, they introduced arbitration in tax to the country, the legal regime of which is set out in Decree-Law No. 10/2011 of 20 January. Regarding tax arbitration, since its inception, the legislator has provided for an appeal to standardise case law. This is the responsibility of the Plenary of the Tax Litigation Chamber of the Supreme Administrative Court, and aims to neutralise contradictory decisions, whether between arbitration and the higher administrative courts or between arbitration decisions themselves. Until recently, administrative arbitration constituted an autonomous and almost secret 'case law' (decisions were not published), but it has recently seen the establishment of an appeal to the Administrative Litigation Chamber of the Supreme Administrative Court for review, alongside an appeal for the standardisation of case law similar to that in force in tax arbitration. |

| The Supreme Administrative Court only hears disputes concerning public service employment contracts within its administrative jurisdiction. These contracts are governed by the General Law on Public Service Employment (Law No. 35/2014 of 20 June). Administrative courts no longer have jurisdiction over disputes concerning employment contracts governed by the Labour Code (Law No. 7/2009 of 12 February), even if they are concluded by administrative entities (judgment of the Court of Conflicts of 18 June 2025, case no. 0150/25.0BESNT). |

| The Supreme Administrative Court mainly hears exceptional appeals against decisions of the Central Administrative Courts (appeal courts). In the case of the tax law chamber, it also hears ordinary appeals when only a question of law is at issue. Exceptionally, it also hears ordinary appeals in the administrative law chamber when the appeal is limited to a question of law. There may be an appeal per saltum from the first instance to the Supreme Administrative Court in these cases. This ensures that Portugal has only one ordinary appeal route for administrative and tax disputes, speeding up proceedings regardless of the subject matter of the dispute. The Supreme Administrative Court also has jurisdiction to hear disputes concerning the legality of administrative acts performed by higher state entities and bodies at first instance. These include the President of the Republic, the Assembly of the Republic and its President, the Council of Ministers, the Prime Minister, the Constitutional Court, the Supreme Administrative Court, the Court of Auditors, the Superior Council of National Defence, the Superior Council of Administrative and Tax Courts and its President, the Prosecutor General of the Republic and the Superior Council of the Public Prosecution Service. On 25 January 2024, the Supreme Administrative Court ruled (case no. 02614/23.1BELSB) that this competence extends beyond the core functions of these entities to include ancillary activities such as public procurement. |

| A temporary incentive scheme has been introduced to encourage the settlement of cases in administrative and tax courts through legal proceedings, such as confession, withdrawal, transaction or agreement. This exceptional and temporary regime is intended to encourage litigants to terminate proceedings in administrative and tax courts as a means of reducing the backlog of pending cases. It will remain in force until 14 September 2026. Thus, any party that performs an act leading to the termination of proceedings may request the refund of 25% of the court fees paid within 10 days of the final judgment determining the termination of proceedings, with the remaining fee not being due. Additionally, court fees are halved in cases that end before opposition, before the final hearing or with an immediate judgement (Article 14-A of the Regulation on Court Costs). |

| The Public Administration may invoke legitimate grounds for non-enforcement (Articles 163 and 175 of the Code of Procedure for Administrative Courts) if enforcement would be impossible or would cause serious harm to the public interest, resulting in compensation. This exception must be invoked immediately after the judgment becomes final. Administrative procedural law expressly permits the invocation of two types of legitimate grounds for non-enforcement: absolute impossibility (natural cause) and exceptional harm to the public interest (administrative cause). The impossibility must be definitive, not temporary (such as that resulting from financial constraints), and it must not be culpable; that is to say, it must not result from facts for which the Administration is responsible. 'Exceptional harm to the public interest' involves balancing the individual's right to have the judgment enforced and the public interest. In this specific case, the public interest would suffer exceptional harm if the judgment were enforced: the harm that would result for the community from performing the obligation would clearly outweigh the loss suffered by the interested party if their rights arising from the decision were not satisfied. In administrative procedural law, it is also possible to modify the subject matter of the proceedings. For example, if it is found that the plaintiff's claim is well-founded, but that satisfaction of their interests is wholly or partly prevented by a situation of absolute impossibility, or if the defendant demonstrates that fulfilment of their duties would cause exceptional damage to the public interest, the court will issue a decision recognising the plaintiff's right. This decision will also recognise the circumstance preventing the issuance of the requested ruling and the plaintiff's right to compensation for this fact. The court will then invite the parties to agree on the amount of compensation due. If no agreement is reached, the plaintiff may request a judicial determination of the compensation due. |

| Article 8.1 of the Dutch General Administrative Law Act (GALA) provides that an interested party may lodge an appeal against a decision ("order") with the administrative court. Article 8.6 (1) GALA provides that the appeal may be lodged with the District Court, unless another administrative court has jurisdiction pursuant to Chapter 2 of the Competence Regulation on Administrative Jurisdiction attached to the GALA. Article 2 of this regulation provides that an appeal against a decision taken on the basis of a provision referred to in this article may be lodged with the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the Council of State (AJD) in first and only instance. As far as is relevant here, this involves: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>- environmental plans and permits on the basis of the Environment and Planning Act,</li><li>- decisions on the basis of the Nuclear Energy Act,</li><li>- decisions (formerly concessions) under the Mining Act,</li><li>- decisions of the Dutch Emission Authority based on Commission Regulation (EU) No 601/2012 of 21 June 2012 on the monitoring and reporting of greenhouse gas emissions pursuant to Directive 2003/87/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council,</li><li>- measures against financial institutions under the Financial Supervision Act,</li><li>- decisions on the basis of the Aviation Act,</li><li>- decisions under the Offshore Wind Energy Act.</li></ul> In addition, pursuant to Article 8:104 (1) of the GALA, an interested party and the administrative body may lodge an appeal against a decision of the District Court. Pursuant to Article 8:105 (1) GALA, the appeal is lodged with the AJD, unless another higher appeal court has jurisdiction pursuant to Chapter 4 of the Competence Regulation on Administrative Jurisdiction. Main examples of cases in which the appeal is lodged with the AJD involve: market stall permits, operating licenses for tour boat companies, gaming arcades, catering establishments and coffeeshops [selling soft drugs], and employment permits and fines under the Foreign Nationals Employment Act. |

| In the first place, the AJD organizes her own training program for judges (State Counselors) and their assistants, inviting internal and external speakers and teachers. Inter alia, a meeting is organized twice a year at which the Division Chairwoman and the three Chamber Presidents explain current case law to the judges and their assistants.In addition, the Training and Study Centre for the Judiciary (SSR) offers courses for judges and/or their assistants. Also many universities offer post-academic courses in which judges and/or their assistants can take part. |

| Although the training in general is not formally limited to certain groups of judges, in practice the training can be specifically relevant and interesting for certain groups of judges and their assistants because of its subject and content, for example courses about technical matters such as noise, air quality or nitrogen deposition.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

| Article 8:47 GALA allows the court to appoint an expert and obtain expert evidence through its expert opinion. In the field of environmental law, the AJD often relies on expert opinions of the Administrative Jurisdiction (Environment and Spatial Planning) Advisory Foundation (STAB). This is an impartial expert organisation which, on request, advises the AJD and other courts on disputes concerning the physical environment. Its advices are mostly used for technically complex factual circumstances, such as measuring the damaging effect of an activity on the environment. Its advisers are trained as engineers, technicians, chemists, biologists, etc. They carry out investigations and prepare reports. These investigations consist of file research, site inspections and talks with all parties to the dispute. STAB presents its findings in the form of an expert report to the AJD, which then gives the parties concerned the opportunity to respond to the report before the case is heard in court. |

| Article 14(2) of the Administrative Jurisdiction Division Regulation 2020 provides that the chair of the AJD, on behalf of the AJD, shall allocate the cases after consultation with the chairmen and women of the chambers or their deputies. Individual members of the AJD have no influence on the allocation of individual cases. Article 14(1) of these regulations provides that in the allocation of the cases, except in so far as the law provides otherwise, at least the following factors are taken into account:- the degree of expertise, experience, availability and employability of the members of the AJD;- the short statutory settlement periods that apply to some cases;- the balanced composition of the hearing chamber;- the previous involvement in a case;- the legal or social complexity of a case;- the need for clustering of similar cases;- the promotion of the unity of law between the highest courts;- the order of entry. On the base of this allocation mechanism, cases of economic importance, such as large scale windmill or housing developments, have been dealt with in a clustered, project-based and prioritized manner. @A17: The AJD acts as a court of first and only instance in the cases specified as such in the answer to question A3. This is determined by law. Apart from this, there is no legal tool for the AJD to act on its own behalf as a court of first instance for large-scale or urgent cases. |

| Section 8.2.4 GALA deals with the simplified procedure. Pursuant to Article 8:54 GALA, the AJD may, in all cases pending before it, until the parties have been invited to appear at a hearing, close the investigation, if it is not necessary to continue the investigation, because: the AJD is manifestly incompetent, the appeal is manifestly inadmissible, the appeal is manifestly unfounded, or the appeal is manifestly well-founded. It should be noted that this procedure by its nature is not applicable in complex, not-manifest cases. Pursuant to Article 8:57 of the GALA, in all cases for which it has jurisdiction, the AJD can decide that the hearing shall be omitted if none of the parties, after having been informed of their right to be heard at the hearing, has declared (within a reasonable period of time set by the AJD) that he wishes to make use of the right to be heard. It should be noted that this procedure is less suitable for complex cases.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| Basically, in all cases within the competence of the AJD, the preliminary relief judge of the AJD can take measures such as suspensions and obligations, provided that an appeal has also been lodged in the main case. Granting rights is not possible in the literal sense, but the AJD may determine that the applicant must be provisionally considered to be in the position as if he had a certain right. |

| The AJD can consider the broader economic effects of its decision if such assessment is part of the legal criteria that regulate the administrative decision, or if the administrative decision depends on a weighing of interests, provided these effects are a relevant interest. In all circumstances the judicial review is confined to a review of legality and proportionality.For example, in the ruling of 29 May 2019, ECLI:NL:RVS:2019:1603, on the so-called Programmatic Approach to Nitrogen, the AJD considered that, in view of Article 2, third paragraph, of the Habitats Directive, when taking conservation measures for Natura 2000 areas, account must be taken of economic, social and cultural requirements, and of regional and local specificities. |

| The AJD can issue an interim judgment, ordering the administrative authority to remedy a defect in the contested decision. The final judgment will then assess whether the defect has actually been remedied. The AJD can also annul a decision while maintaining the legal consequences. Furthermore, the AJD can oblige the administrative body to take a new decision in accordance with the judgment. Under certain circumstances, the AJD can also put a new decision or part of the decision in place of the annulled administrative decision.                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| The Supreme Administrative Court (SAC) considers cassation complaints relating to the protection of public subjective rights in administrative proceedings. Administrative matters may have an economic impact (e.g. public procurements) or may not (e.g. right of access to information). However, the economic impact does not influence the court's or the judicial chamber's jurisdiction or competence. The court's competence is generally determined by the nature of the rights being protected, i.e. whether they are public or private. The nature of these rights is also reflected in the status of the parties and the legal issues adjudicated by the court. |

| To illustrate cases with an economic impact, the SAC recently dealt with the taxation of non-forced prostitution (case No. 22 Afs 24/2025-48) or with public procurement for a new metro line in Prague (case No. 9 As 243/2023-126). To illustrate a case without economic impact in the sense of this analysis, the SAC considered a cassation complaint regarding access to information about the operations of Turów Mine (Polish coal mine, case No. 8 As 85/2025-62). In all these cases, the competence of the SAC was based on the same provisions.                                                                                                                 |

| In the Czech Republic, conflicts arising from public contracts are initially dealt with by administrative authorities. Decisions made by these authorities can then be contested in administrative courts. Matters relating to both the award and the performance of public contracts fall under the jurisdiction of administrative courts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

| The SAC frequently deals with commercial authorisations (e. g. case No. 5 As 311/2022-17 regarding authorization to sell spirits or case No. 3 As 230/2022-28 regarding authorization to work as a security guard at Chateau Austerlitz). It also occasionally deals with decisions made by the Ministry of Health regarding health authorisation. For example, in recent years, the SAC has issued decisions regarding authorisation to work as a midwife providing home care (case No. 2 As 241/2022-74) and authorisation for a pharmaceutical professional to work in a pharmacy (case No. 7 As 135/2023-41).                                                                                           |

| The SAC decides on cases relating to concessions (e.g. public auctions, public transport, water infrastructure and waste management) where the activity of an administrative authority could have infringed public subjective rights. This could include reviewing the granting of concessions or deciding on sanctions for poor performance. More specifically, in case No. 3 As 41/2025-37, a suspension of a concession to provide public auctions due to repeated violations of the Public Auctions Act was reviewed. However, civil courts decide on some disputes, such as payment disputes relating to concessions, unjust enrichment, and damages stemming from poor performance of the concession. |

| Czech administrative courts in the field of intellectual property review the legality of decisions made by the Industrial Property Office, typically in matters relating to the registration, rejection or cancellation of trademarks and patents, their validity and protection. Civil courts, on the other hand, deal with private law disputes between parties, such as the infringement of industrial rights, the determination of authorship or claims under the Copyright Act. Civil courts are also responsible for deciding on compensation for damages, unjust enrichment for unauthorised use of a work and disputes arising from licence agreements.                                             |

| The SAC also reviews decisions regarding service relationships under the Service Act (covering state employees, police, army, etc.). In the case of state employees, the termination of service (e.g. due to the abolition of a post for organizational reasons) is carried out through a formal administrative decision. The SAC is competent to review the legality of such decisions, ensuring that the legal conditions for the termination of the service relationship were met. Regarding the area of working conditions and occupational safety, administrative courts review the legality of interventions taken by supervisory bodies (e.g. fines imposed by Labour Inspectorates for violations of statutory standards). In contrast, civil courts handle individual private-law disputes between employees and employers, such as claims for unpaid overtime, failure to provide protective equipment or damages. |

| In the Czech Republic, there is no system in which a regulatory body (e.g. the Labour Office) authorises redundancies or validates employment protection plans for employees in a private law relationship. Mass layoffs are a private law process regulated by the Labour Code, and disputes regarding their validity are dealt with by civil courts. The employer only has an obligation to notify the Labour Office. The SAC could possibly review administrative sanction for failing to fulfill this notification obligation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

| The suspensive effect of the cassation complaint must not cause harm to the third parties. Pursuant to Section 38(1) of the Code of Administrative Justice, if a motion to initiate proceedings has been filed and it is necessary to provisionally adjust the circumstances of the parties due to imminent serious harm, the court may upon application, by order, impose a preliminary measure on the parties to perform, refrain from, or tolerate something. For the same reasons, the court may also impose such an obligation on a third party if it is fair to do so. Pursuant to Section 73(1) of the Code of Administrative Justice, upon the plaintiff's motion and after hearing the defendant's statement, the court shall grant the action suspensive effect if the enforcement or other legal consequences of the decision would cause the plaintiff disproportionately greater harm than that which may be caused to other persons by granting suspensive effect, and if this is not contrary to an important public interest. |

| The Czech Code of Administrative Justice stipulates that the complainant must be represented by a lawyer in proceedings before the SAC concerning a cassation complaint. A party to the proceedings (whether a natural or legal person) may request that the court appoint a lawyer on their behalf, and such a request will be granted if the applicant meets the conditions for exemption from court fees. Legal entities may also be exempt from court fees if they do not have sufficient financial resources (the law does not distinguish between them in any way, either by purpose or type, case No. 1 As 70/2008-74). However, given the nature of legal entities, the court carefully examines whether the lack of assets claimed by the legal entity is genuine and not feigned. A legal entity that organises its activities in such a way that it remains without sufficient financial resources in the long term, despite normal and necessary expenditure in connection with the activities performed, is not entitled to exemption.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| While the court may take economic consequences into account of its decision, its approach is rather conservative. For example, in its case No. 1 Afs 76/2013-57 the Grand Chamber of the SAC considered the impact of the solar tax on electricity producers. It reflected the Constitutional Court's instruction to consider the liquidation effects of this tax on a case-by-case basis (No. Pl. ÚS 17/11). The SAC ruled on around 100 cases in which the plaintiffs attempted to infer the liquidation effects of the solar tax. The legislation did not address the possible impacts of the solar tax (except for small-scale producers). The court concluded that judicial power cannot simply replace the absence of legislation. For this to be possible, the Constitutional Court's instruction to the legislature to create an appropriate mechanism allowing for an individual approach to producers would need to be fulfilled. Under the legal framework in force at that time, the only way to take into account the devastating effects of the solar levy in individual cases was through the institution of tax remission. In case No. 4 Ads 120/2009, the SAC addressed a legislative error where the formula for calculating employer social security contributions was temporarily missing from the law. Rejecting a formalistic reading that would have allowed companies to stop paying, the Court prioritized the purpose of the law over the text. It argued that because the social security system is "pay-as-you-go" --meaning current collections pay for current benefits --a lapse in funding would harm society and benefit recipients. Therefore, the Court ruled that the obligation to pay remained valid to ensure the stability of the public system. |

| The court may consider the impact on third parties or the market as a whole in its reasoning. In case No. 10 As 95/2025-325, the SAC reviewed a request to pause the public procurement for the Dukovany nuclear power plant expansion. It overturned a lower court's decision that had blocked the contract, rejecting the view that a delay of a few months was insignificant for such a long-term project. Instead, the Court warned of a "domino effect," where even a short delay disrupts complex supply chains and creates massive additional costs. Ultimately, the Court ruled that the public interest in energy security and economic stability clearly outweighed the private interest of the unsuccessful bidder in pausing the process.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| Neither an action nor a cassation complaint in administrative justice has suspensive effect by Czech law. The temporal effects of a decision can typically be adjusted by a resolution on suspensive effect and the imposition of a preliminary measure (see above). However, it is not possible to postpone the enforceability of a decision on a cassation complaint. The court only rarely decides to postpone the effectiveness of its decision. An example of this is case No. 8 Ao 2/2022-53, in which the court ruled on a proposal to repeal a measure of general nature regulating the conditions for retail operations during the pandemic. The court repealed part of the provision with a seven-day deferred effect, given its awareness of the current epidemic situation, the management of which falls within the executive's remit. The executive have to assess how to proceed. |

| The administrative courts, and thus also the SAC as the highest instance of administrative jurisdiction, are responsible for reviewing the legality of authority decisions and other acts of sovereign administration on the one hand, and certain aspects of private sector administration, such as public procurement, on the other. In this sense, the competence of the SAC is determined, on the one hand, by the parties involved (at least one of which is a state authority or a private institution entrusted with public functions) and, on the other hand, by the nature of the activity giving rise to the dispute and the question referred to the court. |

| Urban planning: E.g. the Vienna Building Act (Bauordnung für Wien) establishes the legal framework governing urban planning authorisation procedures in Vienna. It stipulates the categories of construction projects subject to building permits and specifies the substantive and procedural criteria under which such permits are to be granted by the competent authority. The Vienna Building Act also contains provisions regulating the preparation, designation, and adoption of land-use plans (zoning plans) by the public authorities. Commercial authorisation: The Trade Regulation Act (Gewerbeordnung 1994) regulates the exercise of self-employed commercial activities in Austria. It determines e.g. the circumstances under which a trade is subject to mandatory registration and delineates the evidentiary and qualification requirements to be satisfied by the applicant. Health authorisation: The Federal Act on Hospitals and Health Resorts (Bundesgesetz über Krankenanstalten und Kuranstalten) provides the legal basis for the establishment, operation, and organisational structure of hospitals and health resorts in Austria. In particular, it defines the concept of a hospital and lays down the legal and administrative requirements for the granting of the relevant licenses. Also, the Medicinal Products Act (Arzneimittelgesetz) regulates the legal classification of medicinal products and prescribes the conditions under which such products may be manufactured, authorised and placed on the market. The SAC rules over these fields of law as last instance court. |

| All regulatory authorities can monitor and enforce compliance with regulatory acts, but not all regulatory authorities can issue fines. For example, for audiovisual media, KommAustria may conduct proceedings concerning administrative offences based on different regulations (see sec. 2 KommAustria Act; KommAustria-Gesetz). In addition, in certain policy fields regulatory authorities can also act to recover unjustified enrichments which resulted from breaches of regulations. For public service broadcasting, the decision to recover unjustified enrichments is taken by the regulatory authority for broadcasting. In both cases, the decisions of the authorities can ultimately be challenged at the SAC).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| The Austrian SAC is competent to rule on disputes relating to health and safety at work for private enterprises, private enterprises exercising a public function, and public enterprises.It also has jurisdiction over disputes relating to the employment in case of public enterprises and within private enterprises where this is provided for by statute. In case of the privatisation of the public-sector it can be stipulated that federal public service law (e.g. Civil Service Law Act 1979; Beamten-Dienstrechtsgesetz 1979) continues to apply to the existing employees.In such employment-law disputes, the SAC has jurisdiction as the court of last instance.                                                                                                                                                                             |

| Employment protection plans regarding termination: Pursuant to sec. 45a of the Labour Market Promotion Act (Arbeitsmarktförderungsgesetz), an employer intending to dismiss a significant number of employees must submit a written notification to the competent regional office of the Public Employment Service (Regionale Geschäftsstelle des Arbeitsmarktservice) prior to the terminations taking effect. This matter, however, falls under the jurisdiction of the civil courts.Employment protection plans regarding safety and health regulations: The administrative courts (and thus also the SAC) are responsible for employee protection which is intended to ensure the safety and health of employees. The labour inspectorate (Arbeitsinspektorat) as the first instance competent authority monitors and supports compliance with regulations. |

| A25. Please specify in which cases and explain your functions, particularly with regard to reviewing the legality of administrative decisions concerning the authorisation of redundancies or the validation of employment protection plans.The Danish Supreme Court is not only a SAC, but is also the final appeal instance for other cases such as civil and criminal cases. The judicial control encompasses all administrative bodies, regardless of their designation and activities, and all functions of the administrative bodies, i.e. not only cases in which a formal decision has been made. Judicial review of administrative decisions, etc. may occur in all types of cases handled by the courts, including civil proceedings, criminal proceedings, enforcement proceedings etc.In the judicial review of administrative decisions, the court ensures that authorities act within the limits of the law. |

| Financial securities or guarantees are required in cases regarding prohibitions and injunctions, but not for questions regarding the suspensive effect of appealing to the Danish Supreme Court. It should be noted that the question of financial securities or guarantees in principle is a matter for the lower court. |

| Public legal aid is mainly granted to individuals, whose financial resources are below a certain threshold, who are not covered by legal insurance, and where there are reasonable grounds for bringing the case. As a general rule, legal aid is only granted exceptionally in cases originating from the applicant's business activities. |

| To assess the jurisdiction of the administrative court, it is decisive to establish a vertical element within the administrative legal relationship. The manifestation of this vertical element is the existence of a decision or measure issued against a natural or legal person, by which a public authority imposes an obligation, grants an entitlement, or declares the existence of a legal status. A decision in a business-related case may, for instance, involve the imposition of a sanction for a breach of competition rules, the granting of an investment services license, or a decision by a tax administrator whereby a tax is assessed for a taxpayer. The Supreme Administrative Court usually decides as a court of cassation and it reviews the decisions of (first instance) administrative courts. It decides as the court of the first instance in some cases concerning political rights and in disciplinary proceedings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
