| Public contracts may be the basis for an administrative decision. The administrative court may consider contracts as a preliminary question when reviewing the decision. Disputes concerning the performance of public law contracts are usually adjudicated by courts in civil proceedings. In administrative court proceedings, public law contracts may be relevant if a decision was issued in connection with them through the exercise of the authority's public power, thereby determining the rights and obligations of a subject. For instance, in resolutions Case No. 1 KO 8/2018 and 1 KO 10/2018, the competence chamber of the Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic examined the characterisation of providing a contribution to cover the costs of a sheltered workshop based on a specifically concluded agreement. It characterized this agreement as a so-called public contract, stating that for the enforcement of claims arising therefrom, it is decisive whether public law or private law elements prevail. Specifically, it must be determined whether the obligations can be enforced through the issuance of an individual administrative act or via private law institutes. In the Case No. 5Sfk/101/2022 of the Supreme Administrative Court, the plaintiff entered into an agreement with the Ministry of Education, Science, Research and Sport of the Slovak Republic regarding the provision of a non-repayable financial contribution for the implementation of the Medical University Science Park project in Košice. Based on an ex-post audit report, irregularities were uncovered, and the plaintiff subsequently received a letter from the Ministry containing a report on the identified irregularity along with a request for the refund of the funds. The plaintiff filed an action with the Regional Court in administrative court proceedings, seeking a review of the contested administrative acts. The Regional Court rejected the action on the grounds that the contested acts constituted merely a call for voluntary performance of a notified (rather than imposed) obligation based on established (though merely alleged) facts. The contested administrative acts did not definitively bind the plaintiff to return the funds, nor was a final and effective decision issued that would mandate such a refund. The Supreme Administrative Court dismissed the plaintiff's cassation complaint, upholding the Regional Court's decision. |

| Public procurement contracts may be the basis for an administrative decision. The administrative court may consider contracts as a preliminary question when reviewing the decision. In connection with public procurement contracts, we distinguish between objection proceedings and decisions on the imposition of a fine. The Supreme Administrative Court may adjudicate in connection with a public procurement contract if it reviews a decision of an administrative court in which the subject of a judicial review was an authority's decision. It also holds that a decision must have been issued through the exercise of the authority's public power, by which it determined the rights and obligations of a subject. According to a decision of the Administrative Division of the Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic, audit reports and their minutes are considered merely background material for potential sanctions if they do not impose rights or obligations [6Sžfk/15/2018]. These acts are preliminary and not subject to judicial review unless the administrative authority follows the legally prescribed procedure and imposes a sanction based on the audit findings. Proceedings for the determination of the invalidity of a contract, concession contract, or framework agreement constitute civil dispute proceedings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Administrative courts review specific decisions, such as a building authority's decision on a construction project or decisions concerning public health issued by the Public Health Authority or a Regional Public Health Authority.In connection with the urban plan, we consider it necessary to mention that, pursuant to Act No. 200/2022 Coll. on Urban Planning, a municipality's urban plan and a zonal urban plan, including their amendments and supplements, are approved by the municipality along with a generally binding ordinance declaring their binding parts.An action seeking a declaration of non-compliance of a generally binding ordinance of a municipality, city, city district, or self-governing region with the law may be filed by a prosecutor if their protest was not granted (natural or legal persons may submit a petition to the prosecutor's office). In this type of proceeding, the concerned public may also act as a plaintiff if they claim that the generally binding ordinance has violated the public interest in the field of environmental protection.A municipal council resolution approving a urban plan cannot be considered an individual administrative act; similarly, a generally binding ordinance is not one either, as it is a normative legal act adopted by a municipal body to address fundamental issues concerning the municipality as a whole, or its residents specifically, or to regulate legal relations arising and implemented within its territory. (Case No. 5Sžo/232/2010 Supreme Administrative Court of the Slovak Republic).The Business Register and proceedings related thereto are not within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Administrative Court or the administrative courts. |
| A12. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to economic regulation (i.e. to rule on the legality of acts carried out by public authorities to regulate certain markets, or on disputes involving their potential liability)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| The Supreme Administrative Court of the Slovak Republic has the jurisdiction to review decisions of administrative courts concerning decisions issued by public authorities in the given field (such as the Regulatory Office for Network Industries, the Regulatory Authority for Electronic Communications and Postal Services, or the Antimonopoly Office of the Slovak Republic). Within the administrative justice system, the court examines whether these authorities acted in compliance with the law during price regulation and other proceedings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

A15. Is your jurisdiction also competent to rule on the legality and proportionality of pecuniary sanctions imposed by the economic regulatory authorities upon private enterprises for breaches of regulations?

Yes

A16. Please specify:

An administrative court may review the legality of an imposed sanction. The administrative court may also apply sanction moderation; specifically, based on the results of the evidence taken by the court and upon the plaintiff's motion, it may, through a judgment:

- a) change the type or amount of the sanction, even if the public authority did not exceed the legal framework of administrative discretion when imposing it, provided that the sanction is disproportionate to the nature of the act or would have a devastating effect on the plaintiff,
- b) refrain from imposing the sanction if the purpose of administrative punishment can be achieved through the hearing of the case itself.

The Supreme Administrative Court reviews the legality of the administrative court's decision. In proceedings on a cassation complaint, within the judicial review of a administrative court's judgment that exercised the power of moderation, the Supreme Administrative Court does not possess an analogous power to that of the administrative court and cannot replace the administrative court's judicial discretion regarding the moderation of the fine amount with its own (Case No. 6 Asan/14/2017 (R 65/2018)).

A17. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to concessions (i.e. the act whereby a local authority empowers a private person to manage a public service or asset)?

Yes

A18. For all or for some?

For some disputes relating to concessions

A19. Please explain.

Proceedings for the determination of the invalidity of a contract, concession contract, or framework agreement constitute civil dispute proceedings.

An example of where an administrative court has the jurisdiction to adjudicate in connection with a concession is a situation where a public authority identifies a breach of law subsumable under one of the statutory definitions of administrative offenses and issues a decision on a sanction. This decision is subject to review by an administrative court. In such a case, the court also examines the nature of the breach as a preliminary issue.

A20. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to intellectual property?

Yes

A21. Please specify in which context.

Other

A21[other]. Please specify in which context. [Other]

The answer 'In the context of disputes relating to infringement (trademarks, patents, copyrights)' is also applicable. Individual claims related to the protection of intellectual property rights may be asserted in court through civil proceedings via various actions, such as a declaratory action (e.g., to determine whether a given person is the author of a work), an injunction (e.g., for the infringer to refrain from interfering with intellectual property rights), a removal action (to remedy the consequences of an intellectual property right infringement), a claim for damages, or a claim for the recovery of unjust enrichment. Administrative law protection is ensured by, for example, customs authorities, the Slovak Trade Inspection, or the Industrial Property Office of the Slovak Republic. Within the measures for the protection of intellectual property, customs authorities are authorized, upon fulfillment of statutory conditions, to suspend the release of goods suspected of infringing intellectual property, to seize such goods, or to destroy them. Customs authorities also adjudicate offenses and other administrative torts in the area of intellectual property rights violations concerning goods on the domestic market or goods under customs supervision. Through its internal market inspections, the Slovak Trade Inspection monitors compliance with intellectual property rights that are significant from the perspective of consumer protection. The jurisdiction of an administrative court is established if a decision was issued through the exercise of a public authority's sovereign power, by which it determined the rights and obligations of a subject. For instance, the Trademark Act divides jurisdiction over trademark issues between the courts and the Industrial Property Office of the Slovak Republic. A dispute as to whether a registered trademark is confusingly similar to a trademark with an earlier priority right, or whether it is registered for similar services as a trademark with an earlier priority right, falls within the jurisdiction of the Industrial Property Office of the Slovak Republic (NSS SR 1MOboV/22/2008). This decision by the Industrial Property Office of the Slovak Republic is subsequently subject to judicial review by an administrative court.

A22. Is your court competent to rule on employment?

Yes

| Administrative courts do not review private law disputes or other private law matters that fall under the jurisdiction of courts in civil proceedings. This includes the majority of labor law disputes. Relationships arising from the state service of a professional soldier pursuant to Act No. 281/2015 Coll. cannot be considered private law matters due to their nature. The service relationship is, and has always been, characterized as an institute of public law. This relationship does not arise from a contract but through a sovereign act of a service authority, and it differs significantly from an employment relationship, which, conversely, is a typical private law relationship with equal standing of the parties. This is also reflected in the legislation concerning the commencement, modification, course, and termination of state service, as well as related matters (Case No. 1 KO/2/2019) In connection with disputes relating to disciplinary dismissal or dismissal for personal reasons – the Supreme Administrative Court adjudicates on the disciplinary liability of judges, prosecutors, and, if so provided by law, other persons. |

| The Labour Code contains provisions and conditions for collective redundancy. These include, for instance, the obligation to inform employee representatives about the reasons for the collective redundancy, as well as the number and structure of employees whose employment is to be terminated. After consulting the collective redundancy with employee representatives, the employer is obliged to deliver written information on the outcome of the consultation to the Office of Labour, Social Affairs and Family. For a breach of any of these obligations, the Labour Inspection may impose a fine on the employer. An administrative court has the jurisdiction to review the decision on such a fine. The Supreme Administrative Court may subsequently annul the administrative court's decision in cassation proceedings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| The Supreme Administrative Court does not establish thematic divisions. According to the work schedule of the court, some chambers are assigned an agenda on matters of competition, court approval of inspection, state aid or industrial property. Some are also assigned an agenda on financial matters (especially tax, customs, subsidies, financial control, budget refunds, prices, public procurement, financial and capital markets, etc.). The President of the Supreme Administrative Court may, due to the disproportionately high workload of a specific chamber—for instance, as a result of a concurrence of legally complex and extensive cases, or in the event of a long-term absence of a judge or lay judge exceeding six weeks, or for other significant organizational reasons—suspend or restrict the allocation of new cases to the chamber, or take other necessary measures, including the redistribution of cases through random selection. However, the aforementioned applies to all cases; it is not a special rule pertaining exclusively to business-related cases. In general, cases are assigned to chambers in accordance with the court's work schedule through random assignment, and within the senate, the managing president of the chamber assigns the cases. |

| The Administrative Procedure Code does not contain an enumeration (not even a demonstrative one) of individual types of legal costs. The only substantive criterion is the condition that it must be an expense. This expense must have all the characteristics required by law (Section 163 of the administrative procedure code). This means that these are all proven, justified and purposefully incurred expenses that arise in connection with the exercise and defense of the right in the administrative court. Under the given circumstances, no type of expense is a priori excluded from the legal definition of procedural costs. |

| Court fees for SAC proceedings are stated in Act no. 71/1992 Coll. on court fees and the fee for obtaining an extract from the criminal record. This Act contains statutory caps for court fees including fees for initiating proceedings before the Supreme Administrative Court. These fees have a fixed amount. Supreme Administrative Court may upon request grant an exemption from court fees if the circumstances of the party to the proceedings justify it.                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Individuals could qualify for public legal aid if they met the requirements stated in the Act on Granting of Legal Aid to Persons in Material Hardship. Legal aid may be provided to a natural person who is in material need unless the dispute is clearly futile. A natural person in material need can be described as someone who has income that is lower than 1,8 multiples of subsistence level stated by law. The decision not to provide legal aid may be reviewed by administrative court and afterwards by the Supreme Administrative Court as a cassation court.                                                                  |

| Administrative court can at the plaintiff request modify amount of penalty if this sanction is disproportionate to the nature of the act or would have a liquidating nature for the plaintiff. This decision may be reviewed by Supreme Administrative Court. It's important to note that Supreme Administrative Court can't change amount of sanction by his own decision, but it can as a court of cassation annul and return the decision of the administrative court. The Supreme Administrative Court commented on the application of sanction moderation in the legal rule to the decision case no. 4Shk/1/2021, ECLI:SK:NSSSR:2024:1019200601.1 "The sanction moderation available to administrative courts under the relevant provisions of the Administrative Judicial Code should, by its very nature, be applied cautiously, precisely because it effectively encroaches on the administrative discretion available to public administration bodies, which otherwise has a relatively limited scope for judicial review. This is also why the statutory limits of sanction moderation are tied to the evidence provided by the court and its prerequisites are defined by statutory categories such as "inappropriateness" and "liquidatory nature". A proper and, in particular, convincing justification that at least one of these facts occurred in the case or was identified burdens the court applying sanction moderation. According to the Court of Cassation, the strict assertion that even a reduced fine takes into account all the circumstances of the case (note: without specifying which circumstances the administrative court took into account) and that even a moderated fine has the potential to have a preventive effect on the participant represents insufficient justification for the applied sanction moderation." |

A3. Please illustrate.

The Supreme Constitutional Court's main tasks is the preservation of the constitutional order, through the interpretation of the Constitution and the safeguard of the Rule of Law.

The Supreme Constitutional Court has, among other powers, exclusive jurisdiction to decide in a final and conclusive way on every matter concerning Articles 137 to 151 of the Constitution, such as:

Recourses concerning conflict or questioning of authority or competence, raised between any organs or authorities of the Republic (Article 139).

Referrals by the President of the Republic for an opinion in relation to the constitutionality of bills, before they come into force, including bills with an economic impact (Article 140).

Referrals by other Courts for a preliminary ruling regarding the constitutionality of a law, which has already been enacted and is already in force, including laws with an economic impact (Article 144).

The Supreme Constitutional Court, in a case provided by law, where an appeal is referred before it by the Court of Appeal, shall have jurisdiction, as a law may provide, to determine on such appeal and the Court of Appeal, in any other case, shall have jurisdiction to determine on an appeal made against a decision of an Administrative Court having exclusive jurisdiction to decide in the first instance on a recourse made to it on a complaint that a decision, an act or omission of any organ, authority or person, exercising any executive or administrative authority is contrary to any of the provisions of this Constitution or of any law or is made in excess or in abuse of powers vested in such organ or authority or person. Additionally, the Supreme Constitutional Court shall have jurisdiction to determine, in a case provided for by law and as a law may prescribe, on a decision given by the Court of Appeal on an appeal pending before it against a decision of an Administrative Court (Article 146(1)).

The Supreme Constitutional Court is competent to rule on disputes that have an economic impact under its jurisdictions in points ii, iii and iv above and in these jurisdictions the Supreme Constitutional Court is empowered to answer questions of fact. However, even under these jurisdictions, the Court functions as a revisional Court and cannot go into the merits of a finding of technical nature nor it can substitute the findings of the administrative body decision with its own, except in tax and asylum cases. Nevertheless, the Court will annul the decision of an administrative body, concerning technical matters, if it is satisfied that:

- (a) it violates one or more constitutional provisions and or
- (b) it is not in accordance with the law and or
- (c) the administrative body acted in excess or abuse of powers and or
- (d) the administrative body acted under misconception of fact or law and or
- (e) did not examine the factual basis of the case thoroughly.

The most common disputes / administrative decisions that have an economic impact and for which the Supreme Constitutional Court is competent to rule on are listed below:

Public procurement contracts / Tenders

Cancellation or annulment of tenders / Exclusion of entities from public tenders / Blacklisting entities from future tenders

SCOPE OF JURISDICTION IN BUSINESS-RELATED CASES

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

| Administrative dispute proceedings are intended to ensure judicial review of the legality of decisions and actions of public authorities. Such review presupposes the existence of an object of review, namely an administrative act, an individual act, or an action of a public authority. In the absence of such an object, judicial review in administrative dispute proceedings is not possible. Furthermore, judicial protection of the rights and legal interests of individuals and organisations against decisions and actions of public authorities is ensured in administrative disputes only where no other form of judicial protection is provided by law. |

| The determination of costs of essential services as such (payed by the consumers) is considered a matter of private law, falling outside the jurisdiction of administrative courts. If however there is an administrative decision by a regulatory authority (e. g. in energy or telecommunications) imposing a certain framework for determination of prices by the managers of these services, it can be examined in judicial review. |

| Many concessions are awarded by the administrative bodies in a form of an administrative act and can therefore be challenged in administrative court. There are also a number of exceptions to the rule, where the legal remedy is foreseen in a different procedure, mainly performed by the National Authority for Revision of Public Procurement (a specialised tribunal), where the judicial review is limited.                     |

| Priority and urgent cases are determined by law. When determining the order in which other cases are to be dealt with, a judge may take into account, in addition to the time a case was received by the court, its type, nature, and significance. The new Courts Act, which has already entered into force but will apply as of 1 January 2027, provides that, by way of exception, priority treatment of cases may be prescribed by law where this is justified by risks of serious violations of human rights, the protection of life or health, public safety, the protection of the interests of children and minors, damage to public funds, corporate insolvency, major economic harm, or other important reasons in the public interest. The law must specify the reasons for granting such priority treatment. |

| Court fees in administrative disputes are fixed. The highest fee is prescribed for disputes under the legislation governing legal protection in public procurement procedures. Where electronic filing is available, the court fee is reduced by 20% from the prescribed amount. In administrative disputes conducted before the Supreme Court, attorneys' fees are determined in accordance with the Civil Procedure Act and the Attorneys' Tariffication Act. The costs of witnesses, experts, and interpreters are reimbursed pursuant to the Civil Procedure Act and the implementing regulations adopted thereunder.                                                      |

| The applicant's monthly income, or the average monthly income per family member, must not exceed twice the statutory minimum income threshold; the assets of the applicant or the applicant's family must not exceed 48 times the statutory minimum income threshold. When deciding on an application for legal aid, the following factors are taken into account: the applicant's financial situation; the reasonableness of the case and the applicant's prospects of success in the proceedings; and the importance of the matter for the applicant's personal and socio-economic position, or the significance of the outcome for the applicant or the applicant's family. |

| La compétence est aussi déterminée en fonction de la nature de l'activité à l'occasion de laquelle le litige est né. Les deux critères (personne morale de droit public et activité visant l'intérêt général) sont appliqués cumulativement. Ce contentieux administratif, dont connaît le Conseil d'État (ainsi que les tribunaux administratifs et cour administratives d'appel), se distingue en contentieux d'annulation [en premier et dernier ressort ou en appel: ce sont les cas des permis (environnement, urbanisme, zonage), de l'inaction administrative affectant les intérêts commerciaux et.c.] et en contentieux de pleine juridiction (en cassation: ce sont les cas des concessions publiques et des marchés publics en matière d'exécution, de la fiscalité et des douanes, des décisions en matière de concurrence et.c.). En plus, conformément à l'article 372 de la loi 4442/2016, les litiges découlant de la passation de contrats de concession de travaux ou de services et de marchés publics, mis en œuvre sous forme de Partenariats Public-Privé (PPP), relèvent de la compétence du Conseil d'État. De même, les litiges résultant de la passation de marchés publics entrant dans le champ d'application des Directives 2014/24/UE et 2014/25/UE, dont la valeur estimée est supérieure à quinze millions (15.000.000) d'euros, sont jugés par le Conseil d'État et ça indépendamment de la nature des personnes concernées. |
| A4. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals made by economic operators against measures (e.g. prohibitions) adopted by the public authorities that limit or prevent the conduct of economic activities, the obtaining of permits or participation in public procurement contracts?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Le Conseil d'État est compétent pour statuer sur la légalité des actes des autorités publiques (y compris les autorités administratives indépendantes) visant à réglementer les marchés, car en principe il s'agit d'actes réglementaires relevant de sa compétence exclusive.Il connaît également des sanctions infligées aux opérateurs de services essentiels imposés par l'Administration par la voie du recours en cassation.Étant donné que les opérateurs des services essentiels sont des entreprises publiques (c'est à dire de personnes privées), les tarifs qu'elles imposent sont régis par le droit privé. |

| Le Conseil d'État ne dispose pas de la compétence pour juger les litiges relatifs au recrutement ou au parcours professionnel des employés des personnes morales de droit privé qui exercent une fonction publique, ces litiges relevant de la compétence de la cour administrative d'appel en premier et dernier ressort. Il peut toutefois être saisi de litiges relevant du droit du travail (concernant soit les conditions de travail, soit la santé et la sécurité au travail au sein des entreprises publiques), à condition qu'il s'agisse d'un acte réglementaire relevant de sa compétence exclusive. |

| Il s'agit du « procès pilote » ou de la question préjudicielle soumise par les tribunaux administratifs (ou les cours administratives d'appel) telle que prévue par la loi 3900/2010. Par le biais de ce mécanisme, le Conseil d'État statue en premier et dernier ressort sur des affaires soulevant une question d'intérêt général qui impacte un cercle élargi de personnes, y compris les affaires urgentes et prioritaires mais pas seulement à caractère commercial ou présentant un intérêt économique. |

| Dans les cas d'urgence ou de circonstances exceptionnelles, ainsi que dans les procédures spéciales prévoyant expressément l'introduction directe de l'affaire à l'audience (voir, par exemple, l'article 22 de la loi 4864/2021 sur les investissements stratégiques ou les affaires de concurrence), un acte désignant le rapporteur et fixant la date de l'audience est rendu immédiatement après le dépôt du recours (voir l'article 20A du décret présidentiel 18/1989, tel qu'ajouté par la loi 5119/2024). En outre, si l'affaire n'a pas été examinée dans un délai supérieur à 24 mois à compter du dépôt du recours, chaque partie peut introduire une demande d'accélération de la procédure (voir l'article 33A du décret présidentiel 18/1989). En tout état de cause, les affaires relatives à la passation des marchés publics sont traitées en priorité par le biais d'un recours juridictionnel visant à suspendre et à annuler l'acte détachable attaqué (article 372 de la loi n° 4412/2016) |

| Matters relating to administrative contractual relationships are adjudicated by an administrative court and, in the event of cassation proceedings, by the Curia. In the claim, it is possible to seek compensation for damages caused in connection with an administrative contractual relationship and to order the payment of grievance award.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| In public procurement matters, the jurisdiction of administrative and civil courts is sharply divided. The Curia acts as a cassation court in cases that challenge decisions issued by the Public Procurement Arbitration Committee. These cases typically concern violations of the procedural rules set out in the Public Procurement Act. Where the decision indirectly affects the conclusion or invalidity of the contract, administrative courts and, thus, the Curia's Administrative Chamber may also act within the framework of extraordinary remedies, while civil law claims relating to the performance of contracts are adjudicated by courts dealing with civil matters. |

| The Curia acts in panels of five professional judges. If the nature of the case so warrants, up to two members of these five-strong panels may be professional judges who are not assigned to administrative cases. This means that other judges from the Civil Section and the Economic Section may be involved. In addition, assistance may be requested from senior advisers who hold a law degree and work at the Curia, and from judges who participate in the European Legal Advisors Network operated by the NOJ. Currently, an adviser who does not have a law degree assists in the work of a financial panel from time to time. |

| Identical rules apply to all types of cases. The Ministry of Justice's Decree No. 17/2024 (9 December) on Attorney Fees in Court Proceedings sets the minimum amount of litigation costs to be awarded (depending on the value of the case) and states that the court may only reduce this amount at the request of the other party if it is grossly disproportionate. |

A3. Please illustrate.

The Supreme Court is the court of final appeal in all matters of law and also the final arbiter of constitutional issues. The Constitution of Ireland provides for the establishment of three "Superior Courts" of Ireland, each with competence in all areas of law, including civil law, criminal law, administrative law and constitutional issues. Pursuant to Article 34.4.1 of the Constitution of Ireland, the Court of Appeal has appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court. Article 34.5 of the Constitution provides for an appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court if the Supreme Court is satisfied that matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal. The Constitution also provides for a direct appeal from the High Court to the Supreme Court in exceptional circumstances.

Administrative proceedings in the Irish courts are based on a procedure of judicial review whereby a party may challenge the validity of an administrative act of a public body. There are no specialised administrative courts in Ireland. The High Court, which considers judicial review proceedings at first instance, the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court are courts of general jurisdiction.

Accordingly, all cases of economic importance fall under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Ireland, so long as the Supreme Court is satisfied that there is a matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal.

The case of TD v Minister for Education [2001] 4 IR 259 illustrates that economic or budgetary implications do not deprive the courts of jurisdiction, but they do inform the scope and form of the remedies that courts may legitimately grant. The case arose from the State's acknowledged failure to provide adequate education and care to a group of severely disadvantaged children, many of whom were in the care of the health authorities and exhibited serious behavioural difficulties. There was no dispute that the children's constitutional and statutory rights to education had been breached over a prolonged period.

At first instance, the High Court, having found continuing and systemic failures by the State, made mandatory and supervisory orders directing the Minister for Education and other State bodies to put in place specific educational facilities and arrangements for the children, and to report back to the court on progress. These orders were designed to ensure that the children's rights were effectively vindicated and that the State's obligations were met in practice, rather than merely acknowledged in principle.

On appeal, the Supreme Court accepted the gravity of the State's failures and did not resile from the finding that the children's constitutional rights had been breached. The central issue before the Court, was not whether rights existed or had been violated, but whether the courts were constitutionally entitled to retain an ongoing supervisory role over the Executive in order to ensure compliance with those rights.

The Supreme Court held that the High Court had exceeded the limits of judicial power, holding that the judiciary generally does not have the power to direct mandatory orders at the government to enforce positive constitutional rights. While the courts are competent to declare that constitutional rights have been infringed, and to grant appropriate relief to vindicate those rights, they are not entitled to assume a continuing managerial or supervisory function over how the Executive organises and allocates public resources. Such an approach, the Court held, would blur the constitutional separation of powers by drawing the judiciary into the day-to-day administration of public services.

Keane CJ, delivering the principal judgment, emphasised that decisions concerning the deployment of resources, the design of public services, and the prioritisation of competing social needs fall primarily within the remit of the political branches. Even where constitutional rights are engaged, the courts must be careful not to trespass into the domain of policy-making or administration. The fact that the State's failures had serious and ongoing consequences for vulnerable children did not justify a departure from this constitutional boundary.

Accordingly, the Supreme Court allowed the appeal in part and set aside the High Court's supervisory and mandatory orders. The Court confined the appropriate judicial response to declaratory relief, affirming the existence and breach of the children's constitutional rights, while leaving the means of compliance to the Executive and the Oireachtas.

Accordingly, all cases of economic importance fall under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Ireland, so long as the Supreme Court is satisfied that there is a matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal. |

| Administrative proceedings in the Irish courts are based on a procedure of judicial review whereby a party may challenge the validity of an administrative act of a public body. There are no specialised administrative courts in Ireland. The High Court, which considers judicial review proceedings at first instance, the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court are courts of general jurisdiction. Accordingly, all cases of economic importance fall under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Ireland, so long as the Supreme Court is satisfied that there is a matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal. |

A11. Please give some examples.

Dellway Investments Ltd v NAMA [2011] IESC 14 is an example of the Supreme Court's authority on procedural fairness in administrative decision-making, particularly where a public authority's decision has serious economic and property consequences.

The case arose in the context of the establishment of the National Asset Management Agency (NAMA) following the financial crisis. Under the statutory scheme, NAMA was empowered to acquire certain bank loans, a decision which could profoundly affect the financial position, reputation, and commercial prospects of borrowers whose loans were transferred.

Dellway Investments Ltd and related companies were borrowers whose loans were proposed for acquisition by NAMA. They challenged the decision-making process, arguing that they had been denied fair procedures. In particular, they contended that they were not given adequate notice of the proposed acquisition, nor a meaningful opportunity to make representations before a decision was taken that would significantly affect their economic and property interests.

The High Court rejected the challenge, holding that the statutory framework did not require NAMA to afford borrowers a right to be heard before deciding to acquire loans. The borrowers appealed to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court allowed the appeal. The Court held that where a decision of a public body is capable of having serious adverse effects on a person's rights, property, or interests, the requirements of fair procedures are engaged, unless clearly excluded by statute.

The Court emphasised even though the borrowers were not formally parties to the acquisition transaction, the decision could materially affect their property rights, commercial standing, and ability to conduct business. The seriousness of those consequences triggered a constitutional duty to afford fair procedures.

Crucially, the Court rejected the argument that procedural fairness was displaced by the economic urgency or complexity of the NAMA scheme. The Court therefore declared that Dellway and the related companies were entitled to be informed of the proposed acquisition and to have an opportunity to make representations before a final decision was taken, subject to the practical constraints of the statutory scheme.

The significance of Dellway is the principle that administrative decisions with serious economic impact are fully justiciable, and that procedural fairness is a constitutional requirement even in areas involving complex financial regulation and urgent public policy objectives. The case is an affirmation that economic significance does not dilute judicial competence; rather, it reinforces the need for lawful and fair decision-making by public authorities.

A12. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to economic regulation (i.e. to rule on the legality of acts carried out by public authorities to regulate certain markets, or on disputes involving their potential liability)?

Yes

A13. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals relating to the price regulation imposed upon private managers of essential services (energy, telecommunications, water)?

Yes

A14. Please specify:

Administrative proceedings in the Irish courts are based on a procedure of judicial review whereby a party may challenge the validity of an administrative act of a public body. There are no specialised administrative courts in Ireland. The High Court, which considers judicial review proceedings at first instance, the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court are courts of general jurisdiction.

Accordingly, all cases of economic importance fall under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Ireland, so long as the Supreme Court is satisfied that there is a matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal.

A15. Is your jurisdiction also competent to rule on the legality and proportionality of pecuniary sanctions imposed by the economic regulatory authorities upon private enterprises for breaches of regulations?

Yes

| Administrative proceedings in the Irish courts are based on a procedure of judicial review whereby a party may challenge the validity of an administrative act of a public body. There are no specialised administrative courts in Ireland. The High Court, which considers judicial review proceedings at first instance, the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court are courts of general jurisdiction. Accordingly, all cases of economic importance fall under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Ireland, so long as the Supreme Court is satisfied that there is a matter of "general public importance" or it is "necessary in the interests of justice" that there be an appeal. |

| The principles of urgency, risk of serious harm, and balance of interests do apply in the Supreme Court, but they are filtered through the Court's appellate function, not in the first instance. Interim measures before the Supreme Court are exceptional, ancillary, and protective. They are granted not to manage disputes on an ongoing basis, but to ensure that the Court's final determination is capable of having real and effective legal consequences. The courts apply a structured and well-established set of criteria when assessing applications for interim relief such as injunctions. These criteria guide the courts in determining whether urgent protective measures should be granted before the full merits of the case are heard. The first criterion is whether there is a "serious issue to be tried". This means that the applicant must demonstrate that the claim is not frivolous, vexatious, or entirely without merit. It does not require the applicant to prove that they will ultimately succeed, but there must be a legitimate legal question that warrants full judicial consideration. This threshold was articulated by the Supreme Court in Campus Oil v. Minister for Industry and Energy (No. 2) [1983] IR 88 and has been adapted in subsequent case law ( Merck Sharp &amp; Dohme Corp v Clonmel Healthcare Ltd [2019] IESC 65). Secondly, the applicant must establish a risk of irreparable harm if the interim relief is not granted. For instance, in Gerard Dowling and Others v Minister for Finance and Others [2013] IESC 37, the Supreme Court noted that "[i]t is only when even a very short period of notice would run the risk of irreparable harm occurring that it is appropriate for a court to make an interim order." The third key consideration is the balance of convenience. The court assesses which party would suffer greater harm from the granting or refusal of the interim measure. This requires weighing the potential injury to the applicant against the potential disruption or cost to the respondent. As reaffirmed in Okunade v. Minister for Justice [2012] IESC 49, this principle requires a holistic assessment of the circumstances, including urgency, proportionality, and consequences. |

| When the Supreme Court grants interim relief in cases affecting economic or regulatory rights, it may order that the relief lasts until the conclusion of the court proceedings, preserving the status quo until a final judgment can be rendered. Alternatively, it may grant relief for a specific period where immediate protection is required but a permanent suspension of the administrative act is unnecessary or disproportionate                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Only a small group of people qualify for civil legal aid before the Supreme Court, because two strict tests must be met.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| First, the person must pass the means test: their disposable income and assets must fall below the Legal Aid Board's financial thresholds. This limits eligibility to people with genuinely modest resources.                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Second, the person must pass the merits test. The Legal Aid Board will only fund an appeal if the case appears capable of meeting the Supreme Court's constitutional criteria for leave. That means the appeal must raise:                                                                                                                                                       |

| The Supreme Court may consider third-party or market-wide impacts, but only indirectly and as part of assessing legality, fairness, or proportionality. The Court does not act as a market regulator; rather, it takes these broader effects into account to ensure that its orders are practical, proportionate, and do not cause unintended harm beyond the parties before it. |

| Administrative courts do not rule on public procurement contracts. Their jurisdiction is limited to public procurement supervision and to national and EU public funding cases, where procurement-related issues may arise incidentally. Public procurement contracts are reviewed by the Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania only insofar as they are concluded in the context of projects financed by EU funds and only for the purpose of verifying whether the EU funding was used in compliance with the rules governing the administration of such funding.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

| The Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania examines cases concerning decisions made by authorities responsible for state supervision of spatial planning during the spatial planning procedures. These disputes cover almost all stages of the planning process – primarily disputes regarding the refusal of competent authorities to initiate the preparation, amendment or adjustment of spatial planning documents. The Court also examines complaints regarding the annulment of permits to carry out economic activities in the field of financial market supervision and other areas of supervision of business entities' activities. It hears disputes concerning the refusal to issue a permit to carry out concentrations in the field of competition supervision. In the field of environmental protection, it examines disputes concerning mandatory orders for a company's branch not to carry out activities without a valid Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) permit issued in the prescribed manner. In the field of healthcare, the Court examines disputes related to pharmaceutical activities and the annulment of the validity of permits for parallel import of medicinal products; as well as disputes concerning the procedure for issuing a permit (hygiene passport) to a natural person who does not have a license and certificate, prohibiting them from practicing healthcare. |

| In the field of energy, the Court rules on the decisions of the National Energy Regulatory Council that adjust the additional component of the natural gas transmission price for natural gas supply security; on the legality of setting the additional component of the liquefied natural gas price intended for the development of the liquefied natural gas terminal; on the publication of prices in the gas sector; on the setting of upper limits for electricity prices; and on the legality of a unilaterally set temporary component of heat prices. In a normative case, the Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania has ruled on the compliance of the Heat Price Setting Methodology approved by the National Price and Energy Control Commission with higher-ranking legal acts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| No specific procedural provisions apply exclusively to business-related cases or cases of economic importance. However, accelerated consideration may result from statutory deadlines established by the legislator, for example in proceedings concerning investment-related disputes, including cases on the compatibility of investments with national security. In other business-related cases, statutory deadlines concern only specific procedural matters (such as court authorisations or interim measures), not the examination of the case as a whole. In addition to this, according to the Rules on Case Allocation and the Formation of Panels of the Supreme Administrative Court of Lithuania, approved by the President of the Supreme Administrative Court, administrative cases may be assigned on a priority basis by a reasoned order of the President of the Court of Administrative Cases. This may occur due to the nature of the legal relations, reasons for protecting the public interest, the stage of the proceedings, its particularities, the efficiency of the proceedings, and other special circumstances. |

| Under the Law on Administrative Proceedings of the Republic of Lithuania, the court may, by way of a ruling, adjourn the examination of a case where the dispute is referred to judicial mediation, or where the parties to the dispute require time to conduct negotiations with a view to concluding a settlement agreement, as well as in other necessary cases. Accordingly, the parties may also seek an amicable resolution of the dispute through negotiations. |

| The Order No. 1R-85 of the Minister of Justice of the Republic of Lithuania of 2 April 2004 "On the Approval of the Recommendations on the Maximum Amount of Fees Awarded in Civil Cases for Assistance Provided by an Attorney or an Attorney's Assistant" regulates the maximum amount of fees awarded in cases for assistance provided by an attorney or an attorney's assistant. The court may deviate from the coefficients set out in these recommendations and compensate a higher amount of costs only in exceptional cases, based on objective circumstances.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| Public legal aid is mainly granted to natural persons subject to statutory means and merits criteria. Claims directly linked to commercial/independent professional activities may be excluded, but restrictions must be applied in a way that preserves effective access to court (ECtHR's judgment in Urbšienė and Urbšys v. Lithuania (2016)). State-guaranteed legal aid (primary or secondary) may be granted to persons with low income, those receiving social benefits, persons with disabilities, or victims. To receive assistance, an application must be completed and personal documents submitted to the State-guaranteed Legal Aid Service. Primary legal aid (consultations) is provided in municipalities, while secondary legal aid (document preparation, representation in court) is provided through the State-guaranteed Legal Aid Service. |

| En droit luxembourgeois, le contentieux administratif est un contentieux objectif. La compétence matérielle des juridictions administratives est ainsi déterminée par la nature de l'acte qui est contesté par les parties. La Constitution luxembourgeoise reconnaît l'existence de deux ordres juridictionnels dont les compétences sont organisées comme suit : les juridictions de l'ordre judiciaire ont compétence générale en toute matière tandis que les juridictions administratives disposent d'attributions dites particulières (Constitution révisée 2023, art. 98). Ces attributions spécifiques sont prévues par la loi (Constitution révisée 2023, art. 99). En ce qui concerne les actes qui peuvent faire l'objet d'un recours devant les juridictions administratives, la loi modifiée du 7 novembre 1996 portant organisation des juridictions de l'ordre administratif distingue deux types d'actes administratifs : les décisions administratives individuelles et les actes administratifs à caractère réglementaire.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Pour illustrer les compétences de la Cour administrative du Luxembourg, nous retenons trois affaires portant sur des actes administratifs variés afin de témoigner de la diversité des recours qui peuvent être portés devant elle dès lors qu'un acte administratif est contesté : <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>- un arrêt de 2024 dans lequel la Cour a été saisie d'une affaire en matière d'établissements classés et portant plus particulièrement sur l'installation d'éoliennes sur le territoire de la commune luxembourgeoise du Lac de Haute-Sûre, commune frontalière de la Belgique. Dans cette affaire, la commune belge de Bastogne a introduit un recours devant la Cour administrative pour contester la décision par laquelle le ministre luxembourgeois de l'Environnement, du Climat et du Développement durable a délivré à un opérateur économique privé une autorisation d'exploitation d'un parc éolien sur le territoire de la commune luxembourgeoise précitée (Cour adm., 6 juin 2024, n° 49942C du rôle) ;</li><li>- un arrêt de 2023 en matière de marchés publics dans lequel un soumissionnaire a contesté la décision d'adjudication d'un marché public accordé à un autre opérateur économique et portant sur l'exploitation de services de transports publics de diverses lignes locales (Cour adm., 9 mars 2023, n° 48020C du rôle) ;</li><li>- un arrêt de 2021 dans lequel une association sans but lucratif a contesté l'autorisation de procéder à la construction, à l'aménagement et à l'exploitation d'une centrale énergétique (trigénération biomasse) accordée par le ministre du Travail, de l'Emploi et de l'Economie sociale à un opérateur économique privé (Cour adm., 4 février 2021, n° 45110C du rôle).</li></ul> |
| A4. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals made by economic operators against measures (e.g. prohibitions) adopted by the public authorities that limit or prevent the conduct of economic activities, the obtaining of permits or participation in public procurement contracts?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Le droit luxembourgeois ne connaît pas la notion de contrat public telle qu'elle peut exister dans d'autres Etats. Au Luxembourg, la juridiction administrative est, en principe et sauf exception prévue par la loi, uniquement compétente en matière de passation de contrats. C'est par exemple le cas classique des marchés publics où la juridiction administrative est uniquement appelée à contrôler la décision d'attribution du marché qui est à qualifier d'acte administratif unilatéral et qui relève pleinement de la compétence matérielle de la Cour administrative. Cependant, dès lors qu'il s'agit de l'exécution d'un contrat, y compris lorsque celui-ci concerne une personne de droit public, les éventuels litiges découlant du contrat conclu entre la puissance publique et l'opérateur privé relèvent de la compétence exclusive des juridictions judiciaires. En effet, cette séparation de compétence s'explique par le fait que les droits civils relèvent des attributions reconnues aux juridictions de l'ordre civil. On notera qu'il existe une loi spéciale portant sur les recours en matière de marchés publics (Loi modifiée du 10 novembre 2010 instituant les recours en matière de marchés publics). En matière de marchés publics, la juridiction administrative est uniquement compétente pour contrôler la procédure de passation du marché et plus particulièrement l'avis de passation par lequel l'autorité publique décide l'attribution d'un ou de plusieurs marchés publics. |

A16. Please specify:

La Cour administrative est compétente pour statuer sur la légalité et la proportionnalité de diverses sanctions pécuniaires imposées par des autorités de régulation à des opérateurs économiques. Nous pouvons citer :

- les sanctions administratives infligées par la Commission nationale pour la protection des données (CNPD) en cas de violation du règlement général sur la protection des données (RGPD). La Cour administrative du Luxembourg est actuellement saisie d'un appel introduit par un géant américain de l'e-commerce qui conteste l'amende de plus de 700 million d'euros qui lui a été infligée par la CNPD pour non-respect du RGPD ;
- les sanctions administratives infligées par le Conseil de la Concurrence du fait de pratiques tarifaires jugées anticoncurrentielles à l'encontre d'un opérateur dans le secteur des télécommunications (Cour adm., 1er juin 2017, n° 38930C) ;
- les sanctions administratives infligées par l'Inspection du Travail et des Mines en matière d'amende administrative à un opérateur économique du fait de plusieurs infractions à la législation sur la sécurité et la santé au travail (Cour adm., 11 mars 2021, n° 45231C du rôle).

A17. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to concessions (i.e. the act whereby a local authority empowers a private person to manage a public service or asset)?

Yes

A18. For all or for some?

For some disputes relating to concessions

A19. Please explain.

En principe, la juridiction administrative est compétente pour contrôler l'acte par lequel une concession a été accordée à un opérateur économique. L'exécution du contrat prévoyant les conditions et modalités de la concession échappe toutefois à la compétence de la juridiction administrative.

A20. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to intellectual property?

| De manière générale, la juridiction administrative est compétente pour connaître du contentieux de la fonction publique (rémunérations, discipline, licenciements, etc.). Ce contentieux ne s'applique pas uniquement aux fonctionnaires, mais concerne également les employés dits publics (un régime intermédiaire entre le fonctionnaire et le salarié dans le secteur privé). Il convient de noter que la juridiction administrative a été saisie ces dernières années de litiges particuliers portant, par exemple, sur :- le refus par l'Agence pour le développement de l'emploi (ADEM) de faire droit à une demande de dispense en vue de la création d'entreprise en faveur d'une personne bénéficiant d'indemnités de chômage (Cour adm., 12 novembre 2024, n° 50924C)- le refus du ministre de l'Economie de faire droit à une demande rétroactive de chômage partiel pour un opérateur économique ayant introduit une demande de plan de redressement (Cour adm., 16 avril 2024, n° 49905C). |

| Conformément à la procédure devant les juridictions administratives, la Cour peut dans l'ensemble des contentieux qu'elle est amenée à connaître, ordonner des enquêtes, des mesures d'instruction qui peuvent être effectuées par « un technicien » ou encore des vérifications d'écriture. Elle peut également, si le litige l'exige, saisir un expert qui sera chargé de rédiger un avis sur une question technique ayant des incidences sur la décision à venir de la Cour (Cour adm., 18 décembre 2018, n° 41255C). La Cour peut, en outre, compter sur son greffe et sur ses services techniques, informatiques et administratifs. La mobilisation de l'ensemble des ressources évoquées ci-avant n'est pas spécifique au contentieux économique et financier. |

| La Cour administrative ne dispose pas de procédures générales permettant l'examen de contentieux économiques ou financiers dans le cadre d'une procédure accélérée. Selon l'organisation de la juridiction administrative, seul le président du tribunal administratif, juridiction de première instance, peut ordonner des mesures d'urgence (sursis à exécution) ou encore adopter des mesures de sauvegarde. |

| Bien que la conciliation ne soit pas explicitement prévue par la procédure devant la Cour administrative, les magistrats y siégeant y ont régulièrement recours aux fins de trouver un terrain d'entente raisonnable entre les parties. La Cour opère également des visites des lieux pour constater de visu certains litiges, notamment en matière d'urbanisme pouvant affecter un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques. C'est même à l'occasion de ces visites des lieux que la Cour procède, selon les circonstances, à la conciliation des parties. |

| Depuis un arrêt de la Cour constitutionnelle de 2019, la juridiction administrative peut moduler les effets de ses décisions, notamment en matière d'acte administratif à caractère réglementaire. Préalablement à cet arrêt, lesdites actes ne pouvaient faire l'objet d'une annulation que pour l'avenir (C. Const, 15 novembre 2019, n° 150). Par ailleurs, une telle modulation des effets pourrait être prononcée dans une affaire dans laquelle la Cour administrative a saisi la Cour constitutionnelle d'une question de conformité de la loi à la Constitution. En effet, d'après l'article 112, paragraphe (8), de la Constitution « les dispositions des lois déclarées non conformes à la Constitution par un arrêt de la Cour Constitutionnelle cessent d'avoir un effet juridique le lendemain de la publication de cet arrêt dans les formes prévues pour la loi, à moins que la Cour Constitutionnelle n'ait ordonné un autre délai. ». La Cour constitutionnelle pouvant moduler les effets de ses décisions de non-conformité à la Constitution, la juridiction à l'origine de la question préjudicielle serait tenue par la modulation des effets retenues par la Cour constitutionnelle. |

| Public contract falls indirectly under the jurisdiction of the Administrative Court – against the administrative act which precedes or conditions the public contract. In line with the Article 228. para. 3 and 4. of the Law on Public Procurement (“Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia” No. 91/2019 and 92/2023), the administrative dispute is initiated against decisions of the Republic Commission for Protection of Rights in Public Procurement Procedures, as well as in cases when “the Republic Commission for Protection of Rights in Public Procurement Procedures has not made a decision within the time limits set forth in Article 227 of this Law”. The Administrative Court decides in the phase before concluding the contract, i.e. on legality of decisions of the Republic Commission for Protection of Rights in Public Procurement Procedures. The disputes arising from contracts enjoy civil law protection, and property law disputes are resolved within the civil proceedings for which courts of general jurisdiction are competent. In line with the Law on Organization of the Courts (“Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia” No. 10/2023) and the Law on Seats and Territorial Jurisdiction of Courts and Public Prosecutor’s Offices (“Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia” No. 101/2013), disputes between economic entities which arise from public contracts fall under the jurisdiction of commercial courts, while the Administrative Court is competent for protection of rights in public procurement procedures (claims against the decisions of the Republic Commission). In line with the Article 60, par. 3 of the Law on Public-Private Partnerships and Concessions (“Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia”, No. 88 from November 24, 2011, No. 15 from February 25, 2016 and No. 104 from December 23, 2016), „if the parties have not agreed dispute resolution by arbitration, the courts of the Republic of Serbia have exclusive jurisdiction“. |

| The Administrative Court decides on the administrative authorizations which are necessary for the performance of economic activities through the assessment of legality of administrative act in which the facts, on the basis of which the application of the law is grounded, are determined based on those administrative authorizations serving as a proof of fulfillment of the conditions for the performance of a certain economic activity (for example: license for execution of works, license for authorized designers (contractors), license of the Energy Agency of the Republic of Serbia, etc.). These authorizations are most commonly set as a condition for participation in the public procurement procedure (in relation to the exclusion grounds defined under the Article 111 of the Law on Public Procurement) and they vary depending on the subject of the public procurement. The authorizations which are not necessary must not be required, because that would constitute a discriminatory condition. |

| Jurisdiction of the Administrative Court is limited and linked to the administrative acts issued by the authorities responsible for the protection of the intellectual property rights, while the property law disputes and breaches of the intellectual property law are resolved before commercial courts and courts of general jurisdiction in the civil procedure. The Administrative Court is not competent to decide on civil law protection.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| According to the Article 23 of the Law on Administrative Disputes ("Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia", No. 111/2009), "at the request of the plaintiff, the court may postpone the legal effect of the final administrative act that was decided on the merits of the administrative matter, until the court decision is rendered, if the enforcement would cause harm to the plaintiff which would be difficult to rectify, and if the postponement is not against the public interest, or the postponement would not cause greater or irreparable damage to the opposing party, or interested party. Exceptionally, parties in an administrative proceeding may request from the court to postpone the enforcement of an administrative act even before the lawsuit is filed in case of emergency and in case of an appeal which, by law, does not have the suspensory effect, and proceeding on the appeal is not terminated". |

| Article 49, par. 1 of the Court Rules of Procedure ("Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia", No. 110/09 ... 18/22") defines the assignment of cases so that, in order to ensure an equal workload for all the judges in the court, newly received cases are first classified by urgency, type of procedure, or legal area, and then assigned, according to the astronomical calculation of the time of receipt, by the method of random assignment of judges in cases, in accordance with the established Annual Work Schedule.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| The Law on Court Fees in the Republic of Serbia ("Official Gazette of the Republic of Serbia", No. 28/94 ...91/25) in Article 33 stipulates that in administrative disputes, a fee is paid according to the value of the dispute, if the subject matter of the dispute is estimable. If the subject matter of the dispute is not measurable, the amount of 15,000 dinars is determined as the value of the subject matter.                                                                                                                                       |

| Generally, free legal aid is granted to individuals in specific case types before the Norwegian courts, inter alia on child welfare, and may be granted upon application to individuals with low income. In cases to be heard before the Supreme Court, free legal aid may be granted to individuals, including entrepreneurs, upon application without regard to economic conditions. Under specific circumstances the latter may also be extended to SMEs. |

| Administrative courts have jurisdiction over disputes arising in public law relationships unless a different procedure has been provided by the law. Decisive is the legal relationship between the parties to the proceedings. As a general rule, a dispute is considered public law in nature if one party is a bearer of public authority and is acting in a capacity in which private law persons cannot act. For example, if the public authority adopts a spatial plan, disputes arising from it are considered public law disputes, because private-law persons lack the competence to adopt spatial plan. By contrast, if in the course of implementing the plan, the public authority constructs a building that is hazardous and causes damage to another party, the resulting dispute concerning compensation for damage falls within the sphere of private law. In this context, from the perspective of a breach of the obligations of a building owner, it is irrelevant whether the building belongs to the public authority or to a private individual. |

| Administrative courts resolve disputes over public authorities granting and refusal to grant various activity licenses and permits that are required to commence an economic activity. Activity licenses are often required in the following sectors: provision of health services, operation of pharmacies, provision of financial and insurance services, public transport services, broadcasting and media services, manufacture and sale of alcohol, tobacco and other regulated goods, food production and processing, providing gambling services, veterinary services, security services etc. Non sector specific permits that economic actors apply for in connection with providing their goods and services include spatial plans, building authorisations and environmental permits. SAC has jurisdiction to review the legality of issuing such licenses and permits.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| If an administrative act has been issued that contains an obligation to comply with price regulation as set out in the law, the economic actor may file a complaint with the administrative court and therefore to SAC as a court of third instance. SAC is competent to assess whether such administrative act is lawful and, if necessary, to annul it. For example, in its judgment of 12 December 2017 in case no. 3-11-1355, the Administrative Chamber of the Supreme Court of Estonia resolved a dispute concerning price regulation on drinking water. The law provided that the price of drinking water supplied through a public water supply system must be set based on the principles laid down in the law (cost-based, reasonable and observing the principle of equal treatment), and that the water undertaking must obtain approval of the price from the Competition Authority. The Competition Authority refused to approve the water undertaking's application for approval of the water price and required the price to be brought into compliance with the law. The water undertaking filed a complaint against the Competition Authority's decision, but the SAC ruled that the decision was lawful regarding that issue. |

| Regulatory authorities generally have the right to oversee whether companies comply with the requirements laid down by law (state supervision). If an economic actor fail to comply with statutory requirements, the supervisory authority has the right to issue an administrative act ordering compliance. If an economic actor does not comply with such administrative act, the supervisory authority may apply a coercive measure to ensure compliance. For this purpose, a non-compliance levy may be imposed (a requirement to pay a certain sum to the state). When imposing the non-compliance levy, the principle of proportionality must be observed. Administrative courts including SAC have jurisdiction to assess its proportionality. It is important that the coercive measure is not legally considered a punitive measure or a sanction! By contrast, if an economic actor is fined (a punitive measure for the breach of law), administrative courts including SAC lack jurisdiction to review it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

| Administrative Chamber of the Supreme Court of Estonia is relatively small, consisting of only five judges. All cases must be heard by a panel of at least three judges. There is a degree of specialisation among the judges, for example, some judges focus more extensively on public procurement, taxation, anti-money laundering, planning and construction, or environmental law. When incoming cases are allocated, the judge with relevant expertise is usually (but not always) designated as the judge rapporteur. Nevertheless, any of the other judges may also be appointed to the panel |

B20. Please explain.

In general, Estonian law does not prescribe a specific time limit during which a case must be resolved in SAC. The court must resolve the case within a reasonable time. Exceptionally, a shorter procedural time limit is provided, firstly, for the adjudication of applications for interim relief, which must be resolved without delay and secondly, for public procurement disputes. A case concerning public procurement must be resolved by the administrative court within 45 days following the filing of the complaint. Although said provision regulates only proceedings before the court of first instance and not before the SAC, in practice the SAC has, when adjudicating public procurement cases, followed the principle that the duration of the proceedings should remain within that time frame.

PROCEDURAL TOOLS TO ENHANCE EFFICIENCY

C1. Does the SAC in your country have the power to consolidate multiple appeals into a single proceeding (e.g., in similar or mass claims)?

Yes

C2. Consolidation can be ordered:

Both ex officio and upon application

C3. Does consolidation require the parties' consent?

No

C4. Are there procedural provisions governing SAC proceedings allowing business-related cases or cases of economic importance in an accelerated procedure?

Yes

C6. Please explain in which other categories.

Applications for interim measures are also resolved without delay.

C7. Please explain how such a procedure operates.

A case concerning public procurement or concession must be resolved by the administrative court within 45 days following the filing of the complaint. Although said provision regulates only proceedings before the court of first instance and not before the SAC, in practice the SAC has, when adjudicating public procurement cases, followed the principle that the duration of the proceedings should remain within that time frame. Disputes in these categories are prioritised.

| Streamlined procedure can technically be used in any matter, regardless of the category, provided that the interference with the right for which the complainant seeks protection is a minor one. If the protected interest can be measured in money, the interference is considered minor, if its value is no more than 1,000 euros. So while streamlined proceedings can theoretically be used in business related disputes, such disputes do not have notable economic impact. |

| A new digital case file platform is currently in beta testing phase that includes AI tool that can generate summaries of individual documents in a digital case file and answer questions based on these documents. However, said tool has a data-processing capacity limit, so it cannot answer questions based on all documents in a digital file, but only one document at a time. AI based tool to translate documents is also in beta testing phase on digital case file platform. Tools that are planned for introduction further down the line include an AI tool that performs an initial review of an incoming document (e.g. examines who submitted the document, whether the submitter has the right of representation, whether the document was submitted on time, whether the court fee has been paid, etc.). These are tasks that are currently carried out by a secretary, but which could in principle be automated to a certain extent. |

| According to the procedural law the court only awards case costs that are necessary and justified. According to the practice of the SAC, the following principles are considered when assessing the reasonableness of costs: first, as a rule, the costs of legal assistance are ordered to be paid in favour of an administrative authority only where the court case falls outside the authority's everyday core activities. Disputes arising from the performance of tasks assigned to an administrative authority by legislation cannot be regarded as falling outside the authority's core activities. Second, as a rule, procedural costs at a higher level of court should not exceed those incurred at a lower level.                           |

| For-profit corporations and companies do not qualify for state-funded legal aid. Only a natural person may be granted state-funded legal aid if the person is unable to pay for competent legal services due to their financial situation at the time they need legal aid or where the person is able to pay for legal services only partially or in instalments or where their financial situation does not allow for meeting basic subsistence needs after paying for legal services. However, in matters of economic significance, the provision of state legal aid is unlikely, because under the law, state legal aid is not granted if the dispute is related to the applicant's business and does not affect rights unrelated to their business. |

| The procedural law does not grant the court a general right to take public interest (including broader economic effects) into account when making a judgment (with the exception of granting interim relief). The court may only review the legality of the actions of administrative authorities, not their economic expediency. Only in situations where the legal provision obliges the administrative authority to assess the economic impact of its decision can the SAC, during a review of legality, evaluate whether the authority has adhered to the rules of discretion in assessing the economic impact, for example, by taking all relevant factors into account.                                                                           |

| The jurisdiction of the administrative courts is first and foremost determined by the nature of the question concerned. A decision taken by a public body - normally an administrative authority - may be appealed against by a private or legal person affected by the decision, if the decision adversely affects the interests of that person. If the decision is overturned by a court of first instance, the decision-making body normally has the right to appeal against that ruling. Furthermore, the court's jurisdiction is to a large extent also determined by the nature of the parties involved. A public body is usually the decision-making body with regard to the appealed decision, and that party will appear in the court of first instance as a defendant (a accusatorial two-party process). In certain cases, however, an act of law may transfer public decision-making powers to a private body, and the decisions taken by that private body are usually appealable to the administrative courts. As a general rule, the complainant in the court is a private person. But occasionally the addressee of a decision is a public authorities, and in such a case the authority may lodge an appeal against the decision and appear as complainant. |
| A4. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals made by economic operators against measures (e.g. prohibitions) adopted by the public authorities that limit or prevent the conduct of economic activities, the obtaining of permits or participation in public procurement contracts?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

| As a rule, a winning party in an administrative proceeding may not have the costs rewarded by a decision of the administrative court. Instead, the party normally has to bring a lawsuit for damages in the general courts to retrieve the costs incurred by the legal proceedings in administrative courts. But in certain tax cases, the SAC may award a winning private party compensation for reasonable costs incurred by the proceedings. |

| According to the nature of the parties involved: The parties involved in court proceedings under the Administrative Procedure Code, before the administrative courts of first instance and the Supreme Administrative Court are: the authorities that issued the contested administrative act or committed unlawful act or omission, as well as the addressee of the act. In some cases, third parties who have rights arising from the administration's actions or omissions may also participate as interested parties. The economic effect of judicial acts issued in administrative cases applies to both natural and legal persons. Administrative justice, and in particular the jurisdiction of the Supreme Administrative Court, deals with legal disputes with an economic impact within the legal sphere of public and private commercial companies. These companies are typically registered under Bulgarian commercial law, but they may also be registered in an EU Member State or a third country. To be parties in administrative disputes, they must generally be legal entities. Their economic rights are protected by the resolution of these disputes, as set out in Article 19 of the Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria, which states that the Bulgarian economy is based on free enterprise. This covers the right to undertake any economic activity that is not prohibited, provided that it is carried out in conditions of free and fair competition, with free access to the market and the free exchange of goods. It also covers the freedom and independence of each economic entity to determine its market behavior within the framework of the law and good commercial practice. In cases where the administration infringes their economic rights and legitimate interests, it is particularly important for the parties to the dispute to have access to justice. According to the nature of the questions referred to the court: Effective access to justice and respect for the rule of law at national level are crucial for protecting rights that affect individuals' substantive and economic interests, promoting accountability and maintaining the integrity and legitimacy of the Bulgarian legal system. Protecting economic rights at a national level also impacts trade and the EU's internal market because it enables EU citizens, as well as companies, to exercise their fundamental freedoms. This helps create an EU-wide society that respects democratic values and human rights, and promotes a culture of justice and fairness. The nature of the legal disputes examined by administrative courts that have an economic effect on those affected by the act is another relevant criterion for answering the raised question. These disputes relate to areas such as energy, transport, environmental protection, public health, telecommunications, social policy, economic and social cohesion, and consumer and competition protection. |
| A4. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals made by economic operators against measures (e.g. prohibitions) adopted by the public authorities that limit or prevent the conduct of economic activities, the obtaining of permits or participation in public procurement contracts?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| In Bulgaria, review of public procurement contracts is multi-stage and includes administrative (preliminary) and judicial (subsequent) review. This is mainly exercised by the Commission for the Protection of Competition (CPC) and the Supreme Administrative Court (SAC). The aim is to ensure transparency, competition, equal treatment and non-discrimination throughout the entire procurement process, from announcement to conclusion and execution of the contract, in accordance with the Public Procurement Act. Participants may lodge complaints with the CPC against all acts, decisions and actions of the contracting authority (e.g. announcements, documentation, ranking decisions and refusal to conclude a contract). The CPC may impose a suspension of the procedure until the dispute is resolved, in order to prevent irreparable damage. Pursuant to Article 11 of the Public Procurement Act, the acts of public procurement contracting authorities adopted in connection with public procurement procedures are administrative acts. Regarding challenges of contracts, the general view is that neither the CPC nor the SAC can rule on the nullity or validity of a public procurement contract; only the civil court can do so under the Civil Procedure Code. This argument is derived from Article 120 of the Public Procurement Act. Article 120 of the Public Procurement Act refers unresolved issues related to the conclusion, performance and termination of public procurement contracts to the Commercial Act and the Obligations and Contracts Act. This does not limit the regulation of relations between the parties after the contract has been amended solely to Article 116 of the Public Procurement Act, which regulates specific cases of amendment to a public procurement contract. In a case of a legal dispute, the CPC cannot declare a public procurement contract 'null and void'. The legal relations arising from the public procurement contract are civil law relations, not administrative ones, since the contract is not of an administrative nature, as it is defined for other specific contract according to § 1, item 1 of the Additional Provisions of the Law on the Management of Funds from the European Structural and Investment Funds (LMFESIF). However, the contract between the Managing Authority and the beneficiary for non-repayable financial assistance, based on the LMFESIF, is administrative (§ 1, item 1) and subject to appeal under the Administrative Procedure Code (APC). The connection between this contract and the public procurement contract in that the beneficiary of non-repayable financial assistance determines the contractor by conducting a public procurement procedure in accordance with the Public Procurement Act. Therefore, the relationship between the Managing Authority and the beneficiary regarding the provision of non-repayable financial assistance is governed by the LMFESIF, while the relationship between the beneficiary (the contracting authority) and the contractor for project activities is governed by the civil law provisions. The LMFESIF does not contain provisions governing relations between the contracting authority and the contractor with regard to the implementation of the activity that is the subject of the public procurement contract (Ruling No. 37 of 16/09/2020 on Administrative Case No. 27/2020, five-judge panel of the Supreme Administrative Court). Strictly speaking a public procurement contract is not a classic administrative contract, but rather a mixed contract with elements of public and private law. It has the characteristics of a bilateral, compensatory and commutative contract (i.e. civil/commercial law), but is subject to the specific rules of the Public Procurement Act (PPA) due to public interest and the involvement of an administrative body. This brings it closer to public law relations, but does not make it an administrative contract; rather, it is a public law deal.. Amendments to a public procurement contract that has already been concluded are only permissible in exceptional cases. The current Public Procurement Act contains significantly different provisions for amending a concluded public procurement contract than the repealed 2004 law. This is due to the transposition of the provisions of Directives 2014/24/EU and 2014/25/EU. The Public Procurement Act does not explicitly prohibit amending an existing contract. This prohibition is inferred by argument from the contrary interpretation of Article 116(1) of the Public Procurement Act. |

Following the repeal of Article 216 of the Spatial Development Act (SDA, State Gazette No. 25/2019), decisions on building permits, including refusals, can now be appealed directly to the court. The competent court depends on which authority is responsible for issuing the building permit. Generally, the relevant administrative court at the location of the immovable property is responsible, and the Supreme Administrative Court acts as the court of cassation.

However, if the refusal is issued by the Minister of Regional Development and Public Works, the Supreme Administrative Court acts as the court of first instance. According to Article 215 of the Spatial Development Act, individual administrative acts under this Act, refusals to issue them and administrative acts by which they are revoked or upheld concerning urban planning issues, may be appealed before the relevant administrative court at the location of the real estate. Acts and refusals by the Minister of Regional Development and Public Works, the Minister of Defence and the Minister of the Interior shall be appealed to the Supreme Administrative Court.

By Decision No. 14 of 15 October 2020 on Constitutional Case No. 2 of 2020, published in State Gazette No. 92 of 27 October 2020, the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Bulgaria declared the provision of Article 215, paragraph 6 of the Spatial Development Act unconstitutional. According to this provision, general development plans and their amendments were not subject to judicial review.

According to Article 53, paragraphs 1 and 3 of the Excise Duties and Tax Warehouses Act, the Customs Agency director has the power to terminate a commercial company's licence to carry out a specific commercial activity — namely, to manage a tax warehouse for the storage of excise goods. The Administrative Court considers this to be a sanction against the commercial company. Following the established practice of the Court of Justice of the European Union, the Court assesses its legality and, more specifically, its compliance with substantive law. It finds that, in order to be materially lawful, the principle of proportionality must be observed and it must not exceed what is appropriate and necessary to achieve the legitimate objectives pursued by this legal regulation. To assess the punitive nature of the administrative act issued, the court proceeds from the CJEU established practice, according to which three criteria are relevant. The first is the legal classification of the infringement under domestic law; the second, the nature of the infringement itself; and the third, the severity of the sanction that may be imposed on the person concerned.

Orders imposing sanctions on medical-treatment facilities include the termination of an administrative contract with the National Health Insurance Fund, in cases where a medical institution has violated the mandatory requirements of the Health Insurance Act and the National Framework Agreement for the relevant calendar year. Decisions of the first-instance administrative courts on these matters are subject to cassation review by the Supreme administrative court.

A12. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to economic regulation (i.e. to rule on the legality of acts carried out by public authorities to regulate certain markets, or on disputes involving their potential liability)?

Yes

A13. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on appeals relating to the price regulation imposed upon private managers of essential services (energy, telecommunications, water)?

Yes

A14. Please specify:

Under the Energy Act, market relations for the production and purchase of electricity are under specific rules that establish a framework for freedom of contract in public interest. In Bulgaria, the Energy and Water Regulatory Commission is authorized to regulate prices in cases specified in the Energy Act. This includes setting the base value of electricity per 1 MWh for domestic end customers for the relevant regulatory period and determining the component of the end supplier's price relating to the supply of electricity to household end customers.

Furthermore, if the Commission establishes that there is competition, the prices of energy, natural gas and services provided by energy companies are not subject to its regulatory powers. This creates conditions for free price negotiation under market conditions for the relevant activity in the energy sector. The Commission determines the component of the end supplier's price relating to the supply of electricity to household customers through a universal service.

When exercising its price regulatory powers, the Commission is guided by the principles set out in Articles 23, 24 and 31 of the Energy Act. These include promoting the development of a competitive, secure and environmentally sustainable internal market for electricity and natural gas within the European Union; ensuring balance between energy companies and customers; and ensuring equality between different categories of energy companies and customers. However, the Commission does not regulate all prices on the energy market, only those expressly specified in Article 30 of the Energy Act. When exercising its price regulation powers, the Energy and Water Regulatory Commission may apply different regulatory methods, set performance indicators for energy companies and establish comparability indicators. The Commission works with two main methods of setting prices. When considering legal disputes relating to the EWRC's price policy, the Supreme Administrative Court applies the established practice of the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Regarding price regulation, the EWRC has the right to impose coercive administrative measures on private legal entities. Pursuant to Article 201 of the Energy Act, the EWRC exercises this power ex officio, rather than at the request of another legal entity.

According to Article 203 of the Energy Act, decisions to impose coercive measures can be appealed to the commission or the Minister of Energy, and then to the Administrative Court in Sofia, in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Code. Appeals must be made within 14 days of notification and are subject to immediate enforcement; they also have no suspensive effect.

Decisions of the administrative courts are subject to cassation review before the Supreme Administrative Court. The most common cassation objections by companies against which the coercive administrative measure has been issued relate to non-compliance with the principles of proportionality and necessity in the issuance of the coercive administrative measures.

Additionally, the principle of freedom of contract does not apply to legal relations concerning the purchase of electricity produced from renewable sources, since the primary terms and conditions of such contracts are legally mandated. The prices at which producers sell electricity to the public or end supplier are not subject to free negotiation but are instead regulated by the Energy and Water Regulatory Commission (EWRC).

Telecommunications regulation is the process through which government agencies (such as the Bulgarian Communications Regulation Commission, or CRC) establish rules to control the sector and ensure competition, consumer protection, quality services and the development of electronic communications. This covers mobile and fixed services, the internet and postal services, and is in accordance with national legislation.

In Bulgaria, the CRC is responsible for enforcing telecoms laws and supervising the telecoms market. The legality of the CRC's administrative acts is also subject to judicial review.

A15. Is your jurisdiction also competent to rule on the legality and proportionality of pecuniary sanctions imposed by the economic regulatory authorities upon private enterprises for breaches of regulations?

Yes

A16. Please specify:

The pecuniary sanctions imposed by regulatory authorities on private enterprises in Bulgaria are substantial. There is an explicit provision — Article 323f. (new, State Gazette No. 99 of 2025) — part of the Electronic Communications Act — which states that intermediary service providers who violate an obligation set out in Regulation (EU) 2022/2065 shall be subject to a fine of up to 6% of their annual income, or a financial penalty of up to 6% of their global annual turnover in the previous financial year. These fines can be challenged before the First Instance Administrative Court, whose judgment can be appealed before the Supreme Administrative Court.

Fines and property sanctions under this section shall be imposed by the relevant authority, as defined in Article 323g, paragraph 2 of the Electronic Communications Act, without a statement of administrative violation being drawn up. If appealed under the Administrative Procedure Code the Supreme Administrative Court is a court of cassation.

In the Value Added Tax Act, Chapter Twenty-Six, “Compulsory administrative measures and administrative penalties” violations of this law by natural and legal persons are listed. Natural persons are subject to fines, while legal persons are subject to property sanctions. For example, according to Article 180, paragraph 1 of the Value Added Tax Act, a registered person who is obliged to charge tax but fails to do so within the time limits provided for in the law shall be punished with a fine for individuals who are not traders, or a property sanction for legal entities and sole traders, in an amount equal to the uncharged tax, but not less than 500 BGN.

In the event of a repeat violation, the amount of the fine or property sanction shall be double the amount of the unpaid tax, but not less than BGN 1,000. According to Article 178, paragraph 1, a person liable for tax under this law who is required to submit an application for registration or termination of registration within the time limits established by this law, but fails to do so, shall be fined – if the person is not a trader, or be subject to a property sanction – if the person is a legal entity or sole trader, in an amount ranging from BGN 500 to BGN 5,000. Fines and property sanctions shall be imposed by the tax administration /National Revenue Agency/.

To establish violations of the Competition Protection Act, the Competition Protection Commission can impose property sanctions, periodic sanctions and fines. In accordance with the principle of proportionality, the amounts of these sanctions and fines should not exceed what is necessary to effectively punish the offender and achieve a sufficiently strong deterrent effect. The Commission for the Protection of Competition determines the specific amount of the sanction in accordance with its adopted Methodology, which is published in the State Gazette.

When determining the sanction, the severity and duration of the infringement, as well as any mitigating or aggravating circumstances, are taken into account. The amount imposed may not exceed the maximum limit specified in Article 100 of the Competition Protection Act, as the Commission can impose a financial penalty of up to 10 per cent of an enterprise's or association of enterprises' total turnover for the previous financial year for violations specified in this provision.

In cases where the Commission for the Protection of Competition establishes an infringement under Article 101 or 102 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, or under national law, and imposes sanctions, the national administrative court shall review whether the Commission lawfully determined the amount of the penalty and stated reasons for individualizing it, and whether these reasons correspond to the evidence in the administrative file.

If the court deems that the penalty has been unlawfully determined as excessive, it has the authority to reduce the amount. The reverse hypothesis is not admissible in view of the principle of reformatio in peius.

Chapter 24 of the Energy Act contains numerous provisions related to administrative penalties, specifying the violations of this Act, the fines imposed on natural persons, and the sanctions imposed on legal entities for breaching the requirements of the Energy Act. These fines and sanctions are imposed by the Energy and Water Regulatory Commission or duly authorised officials. Energy companies are the most frequent violators of the provisions of the Energy Act.

In Chapter Six of the Investment Promotion Act a national mechanism is in place to screen foreign direct investments related to security or public order, in accordance with Regulation (EU) 2019/452. This mechanism regulates direct foreign investment by a foreign investor. The law contains a legal definition of 'foreign investor'. Foreign investors are also subject to administrative penalties for failing to comply with their obligations under this law. A foreign investor under Chapter Six may be fined or subject to a property sanction amounting to 5 percent of the investment's value, but no less than BGN 50,000, if they provide inaccurate, incomplete or misleading information in an application for authorization of a foreign direct investment; make a direct foreign investment without a permit issued under the terms of this law; or make a direct foreign investment in violation of the terms of a conditional permit issued under Article 27e, paragraph 2, item 2 of the law. Penalty orders shall be issued by specially authorized officials. These orders are subject to judicial review under the Administrative Offences and Penalties Act. In this situation, the Supreme Administrative Court is not competent to rule on such cases. Instead, the lower administrative court acts as a court of cassation.

A17. Is your court competent to rule on disputes relating to concessions (i.e. the act whereby a local authority empowers a private person to manage a public service or asset)?

Yes

A18. For all or for some?

For some disputes relating to concessions

A19. Please explain.

The Supreme Administrative Court has jurisdiction to rule on disputes relating to the granting of concessions. The main law governing this matter is the Concessions Act, published in the State Gazette (No. 96, 1 December 2017) and effective as of 2 January 2018. The Act regulates public-private partnerships, whereby an economic operator performs construction or provides services through a concession upon assignment by a contracting authority and/or a contracting entity. The Act regulates public-private partnerships in which an economic operator performs construction or provides services through a construction or service concession, upon assignment by a contracting authority and/or a contracting entity. The law applies to any construction or service concession, regardless of whether its value is greater than or equal to the equivalent European threshold set out in a European Commission regulation adopted under Article 9 of Directive 2014/23/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 February 2014 on the award of concession contracts (OJ L 94/1 of 28 March 2014).

Under this law, concessions fall into one of three categories depending on their subject matter: construction concessions, service concessions, and concessions for the use of public state or municipal property. The first two types are explicitly regulated as public-private partnerships, whereby a public authority entrusts an economic operator with construction or service provision. In return, the economic operator has the right to operate the construction or provide the service, and to receive income from it, while assuming the operational risk.

Concessions for underground resources and mineral water extraction remain outside the scope of the new Concessions Act, and will continue to be granted and implemented under the terms and conditions of the Underground Resources Act and Water Act respectively. Certain types of construction activities and services are also excluded from the Act's scope, as listed exhaustively in an annex to the Act. (Articles 25–26). Examples of such exceptions include activities and services relating to defense and security, legal services, conciliation and arbitration services, and the acquisition or rental of land, existing buildings or other real estate, or rights relating to them, regardless of the financial means. Contracts relating to the provision or operation of public electronic communications networks, or the provision of one or more public electronic communications services, are also excluded. Under these laws, the Supreme Administrative Court has jurisdiction to act as a court of first instance or a court of cassation.

According to Article 154(3) of the Concessions Act, any issues relating to the conclusion, performance, amendment or termination of a concession agreement that remains unresolved shall be governed by the relevant provisions of the Commercial Act or the Obligations and Contracts Act. Disputes relating to the conclusion, performance, amendment or termination of a concession contract shall be settled by a court in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code, except in cases referred to in paragraph 3. Paragraph 3 states that the parties may agree that all or certain disputes shall be settled by an arbitral tribunal. Under Article 156 of the Concessions Act, decisions made by the concessionaire regarding the selection process, as well as decisions made by the commission to exclude candidates from a competitive negotiation or dialogue procedure, are subject to appeal under this chapter. Decisions under paragraph 1 shall be appealed to the Commission for the Protection of Competition regarding their legality. The actions or omissions of the concessionaire that impede access to or participation in the procedure for determining the concessionaire shall also be subject to appeal before the Commission for the Protection of Competition.

According to Article 178 of the Concessions Act, the decision of the Commission for the Protection of Competition can be appealed to a three-person panel of the Supreme Administrative Court within 14 days of notification to the relevant parties. The SAC shall rule on the appeal within one month of receiving it, and its decision shall be final. The SAC may also act as a court of cassation in the event of a dispute concerning a concession if the subject of the dispute is a decision of the administrative court of first instance.

However, the administrative court does not have jurisdiction to rule on disputes concerning the conclusion, performance, amendment or termination of a concession agreement, as these are civil matters. Claims for the annulment or amendment of a concession agreement are examined by the civil courts.

| According to the Civil Servants Act, administrative courts only hear disputes relating to the termination of employment contracts between civil servants and administrative bodies. This is because the establishment, performance, amendment and termination of such relationships are considered administrative matters (see Articles 9 and 108 of the Civil Servants Act). The redundancy of a civil servant also results in the termination of the employment relationship. Termination can only take place on the grounds specified in law. According to Article 106(2) of the Civil Servants Act, the appointing authority may terminate the employment relationship with one month's notice in the event of redundancy. According to case law of the Supreme Administrative Court, whether the redundancy is appropriate is not part of the judicial review of legality. This review only examines whether the factual grounds for redundancy under Article 106(1)(2) of the Civil Servants Act have been met, and whether the redundancy was carried out in accordance with the statutory procedure and by the competent authority. The relevant administrative court of first instance is the competent court to examine disputes arising in connection with this specific hypothesis of termination of employment. The lower administrative court's decision is subject to cassation review by the Supreme Administrative Court under the procedure of Article 208 et seq. of the Administrative Procedure Code. |

| Regarding the question raised, it should be noted that, under Article 132(1) of the Administrative Procedure Code, administrative courts have jurisdiction over all administrative cases, except those that fall within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Administrative Court. This is the basic legal provision. According to Article 132(2), the Supreme Administrative Court has jurisdiction over all cases listed exhaustively therein. When administrative acts are issued by the Council of Ministers, the Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Ministers and Ministers in the exercise of their constitutional powers to lead and implement state administration, and when it is provided for by law, the Supreme Administrative Court shall act as a court of first instance. In all other cases provided for by law, the Supreme Administrative Court shall act as a court of cassation. |

| For certain categories of cases, such as those under the Competition Act, the Concessions Act and the Energy Act, there are provisions for fast-tracked proceedings. These are considered in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Code, and the court issues a ruling immediately. Article 60 of the Administrative Procedure Code also establishes a general rule concerning administrative acts that include an order for preliminary execution when necessary to protect citizens' life or health, particularly important state or public interests, or to prevent the implementation of the act from being thwarted or seriously impeded. This may also be necessary to prevent significant or difficult-to-repair damage, or at the request of one of the parties in defence of their particularly important interest. An order allowing or refusing preliminary enforcement may be appealed to the administrative authority within three days of notification, regardless of whether the administrative act has been challenged. If the order allowing or refusing preliminary enforcement, or the notification of its issuance, does not indicate the relevant authority and the time limit for lodging an appeal, the time limit for appeal shall be extended to 14 days. ☐ If the order allowing or refusing preliminary enforcement, or the notice of its issuance, incorrectly states that it is not subject to appeal, the deadline for appealing it shall be extended to one month. The appeal will be considered immediately in a closed session and copies will not be served on the parties. This does not suspend preliminary enforcement, but the court may suspend it upon request until a final decision is made. ☐ An order allowing the preliminary enforcement of an administrative act is an independent administrative act and is therefore subject to judicial review, regardless of the lawfulness of the underlying administrative act. In the case of administrative coercive acts, e.g. revocation of permits and licences, preliminary enforcement of the administrative act is required by law and does not require an additional statement by the administrative authority. When challenging an order for the preliminary enforcement of an act, it must be established that significant damage would likely occur if the act were enforced late, and the burden of proof lies with the challenger. Furthermore, pursuant to Article 166(3) of the Administrative Procedure Code, if the challenger could suffer significant or irreparable harm, the court shall immediately rule on the party's request for suspension of preliminary enforcement admitted by an order of the authority that issued the act under Article 60(1) that has entered into force. Preliminary enforcement may only be suspended on the basis of new circumstances. The court shall make an immediate decision, which may be appealed by private appeal within seven days of notification. |

| The principle is that administrative acts, including those affecting economic interests, are subject to judicial review under Article 145 et seq. The Administrative Procedure Code provides for normal court proceedings with no accelerated deadlines for challenging administrative acts, and requires the court to deliver its ruling within one month of the case's conclusion. Expedited proceedings under various substantive laws are expressly regulated - such as competition proceedings, environmental proceedings. This also applies to the Electronic Communications Act and the Waste Management Act in proceedings under Article 201 of the Energy Act and etc. |

D5. Please explain.

Simple state fee and proportional state fees are set for the initiation of administrative proceedings. In cases before the administrative court of first instance (or the Supreme Administrative Court when it is the court of first instance in the dispute), natural persons shall pay a state fee of 10 BGN, and legal entities shall pay a state fee of 50 BGN.

For cassation cases, Article 227a of the Administrative Procedure Code specifies the following state fees:

The cassation appellant shall pay a state fee in advance of BGN 70 for citizens, sole traders, state and municipal authorities, and other persons performing public functions or organisations providing public services; and BGN 370 for organisations. Where there is a determinable material interest in the case, these fees are not payable, but a fee determined as a percentage of the interest is payable.

A state fee for proceedings is not payable by the prosecutor's office for filing a protest by a party to whom legal aid has been granted under the conditions of Article 23, paragraph 2 of the Legal Aid Act, nor by citizens recognised by the court as lacking the means to pay it.

When considering an application for exemption from the state fee, the court shall take into account:

1. the income of the person and their family;
2. their financial situation, certified by a written declaration;
3. family status;
4. health status;
5. employment;
6. age;
7. other relevant circumstances.

Where there is a determinable material interest in the case, the state fee for citizens, sole traders, organisations, state and municipal authorities, and other persons performing public functions and organisations providing public services shall be proportional and shall amount to 0.8 per cent of the material interest, but not more than BGN 1,700. In cases where the material interest exceeds BGN 10,000,000, the fee is BGN 4,500.

Regardless of whether there is a determinable material interest in the case, the fee for cassation appeals concerning pensions, health and social security and assistance shall be BGN 30 for citizens and sole traders, and BGN 200 for organisations, state and municipal authorities, and other persons performing public functions and organisations providing public services.

In cassation proceedings under the Administrative Offences and Penalties Act, the provisions of Article 227a of the Administrative Procedure Code do not apply.

For proceedings initiated on the basis of a private complaint, a fee of BGN 30 shall be collected from citizens and state and municipal authorities, and a fee of BGN 150 shall be collected from organisations. Citizens shall not be required to pay a fee for private complaints concerning pensions, health, and social insurance and assistance.

Pursuant to Article 9a of the Law on the Liability of the State and Municipalities for Damages (heading amended — State Gazette, No. 30 of 11 April 2006, effective as of 12 July 2006), a simple state fee shall be paid for cases under this law, in an amount determined by the tariff adopted by the Council of Ministers. Expenses related to the cases, as well as expenses related to enforcement, shall not be paid in advance.

☒ In accordance with Article 4 of Regulation (EC) No 1103/97 and the Law on the Introduction of the Euro in the Republic of Bulgaria, which comes into effect on 1 January 2026, the conversion from BGN leva to euros shall be carried out by dividing the BGN amount by the full numerical value of the official exchange rate, expressed in six digits with all five digits after the decimal point. The official exchange rate must not be rounded or abbreviated when performing the conversion.

| The right to defence, as guaranteed by Article 56 of the Constitution, includes the essential element of citizens having the right to legal representation. This is sometimes necessary to ensure an effective and full defence. In such cases, the European Convention on Human Rights also requires the provision of free legal aid in administrative disputes as part of the guarantee of a fair trial (where procedural representation is mandatory, where personal defence would be ineffective due to the complexity or specific nature of the case, or where the use of legal representation by the other party would affect the fairness of the trial as a whole). The legal aid system, as set out in Article 21(2) of the Legal Aid Act, covers cases where legal representation or a reserve defence counsel is mandatory by law. It also covers cases where the accused, defendant or party to a criminal, civil or administrative case cannot afford a lawyer, wants one and it is in the interests of justice to provide one. In such cases, the person is not required to reimburse the costs of the legal aid provided. In civil and administrative cases, legal aid is provided when the relevant competent authorities present evidence to the court or the National authorities for legal aid, who then considers whether the party has the means to pay for a lawyer's fees. According to the Legal Aid Act, legal aid is refused when its provision would not benefit the individual; when the claim is manifestly unfounded, unjustified or inadmissible; and in commercial cases and tax cases under the Tax and Social Security Procedure Code. |

| The SAC is competent 1) to hear appeals against administrative decisions and 2) to solve matters of administrative litigation (Administrative Judicial Procedure Act 808/2019, Sections 6 and 20). Thus, 1) the SAC may rule on disputes that concern issues subject to an administrative decision (such as planning permits, taxation, various authorisations); 2) the SAC may rule on administrative disputes (hallintoriita) that concern liabilities or interests governed by public law (eg recovery of subsidies acquired unduly by economic operators). It is also competent to rule on disputes arising from administrative contracts (hallintosopimus, ie contracts concerning the performance of a public administrative duty or relating to the exercise of public authority). Such contracts may concern the outsourcing of eg postal services, insurances, different sorts of inspections eg in the traffic sector, or healthcare and education services, to private parties; the conditions attached to an economic benefit conferred to an economic operator (eg certain agricultural subsidies); or contract-based limitations on use of property (eg certain forms of environmental protection). |

| In matters relating to award and in matters relating to performance. Insofar as 'public contract' refers to any and all contracts made by public authorities, the SAC is competent only in regard to such public contracts that involve the use of public power and that thus are considered to be governed by public law. All aspects of such contracts (award, performance, termination etc) fall within the SAC's jurisdiction. In contrast, contracts concluded between public and private actors that are purely private in character do not fall within the SAC's jurisdiction at all.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| In the majority of cases, authorisations required to carry out economic activity are awarded through an administrative decision and thus fall within the SAC's competence. Such is the case for all urban planning authorisations and virtually all commercial, health, and safety authorisations. A notable exception among commercial authorisations are admissions to bar for attorneys which are assigned to general courts and fall outside the SAC's jurisdiction.                                                                                         |

| The SAC is competent to review the legality of administrative decisions taken by employment protection authorities on employers' compliance with employment protection legislation (including employer duties relating to safety, work-hour records, providing information to employees, occupational health, and anti-discrimination). It also hears eg cases concerning administrative decisions on subsidies to employers (eg pay subsidies). It does not, however, have competence to hear disputes between employers and employees touching upon these or any other issues, regardless of whether the employer is a private or a public body. (The SAC hears occupational disputes between the state and municipalities and public servants; this, however, is deemed to fall outside the scope of this survey.) |
| Through extraordinary appeal, the SAC may also review decisions on wage guarantees (paid to employees in case their employers default as a result of insolvency), excluding in situations that involve a dispute over the existence of the wage claim between the employer and employee.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

INSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURE AND SPECIALIZATION

| B1. If your court deals with business-related cases or cases of economic importance, it acts... |
| Sometimes as a court of appeal and sometimes as a court of first and last instance              |

B2. Please explain.

In the majority of cases of economic importance, the SAC acts as a court of appeal.

In tax cases, it is possible to seek leave to bring the case directly to the SAC instead of a lower-level Administrative Court if there is a need for precedent in the question at stake.

The SAC also acts as a court of first and last instance in appeals brought against decisions by the Government or the Government of Åland Islands. Government decisions of economic importance may concern eg the building of nuclear power plants. The Government of Åland decides on a variety of issues of economic importance in the autonomous region of Åland Islands, encompassing eg land use and environmental protection, acquisition of land, public procurement, commercial authorisations, as well as government subsidies. In addition, the SAC acts as a court of first and last instance in cases concerning the declaration of a telecommunications company as an undertaking enjoying significant market power under the Act on Electronic Communications Services, 917/2014.

B3. Are there specialised chambers or thematic divisions for business-related cases or cases of economic importance in your court?

No

B5. Are there any special rules regarding the case assignment to individual judges for business-related cases or cases of economic importance (based on their case-load, backlog, experience etc.)?

Yes

B6. Please specify.

The electronic survey insisted on a negative answer to Question B3 in order for Questions B5 and B6 to appear. It seems as no alternative in B3 makes it possible to give an explanation in B4. which is why it is noted in this connection: There are no specialised chambers (as opposed to general chambers) as such. However, specialisation is taken into consideration in the general allocation of cases between the (currently) two chambers of the SAC. Different categories of cases are assigned to each chamber by decision of the President of the SAC. Accordingly, the Members of the SAC that possess expertise in the relevant fields of law are assigned to the chamber matching their competence. Currently, one of the two chambers hears most of the cases of economic importance (including cases concerning land use, building and environmental protection, taxation, competition and procurement, as well as transport and communication); however, also the other chamber is assigned with cases of economic importance (eg. cases concerning municipal and self-government matters which may entail cases concerning municipal decisions of economic importance, as well as cases concerning data protection).

B6 Specification: As a premise, there are no special rules applicable to business-related cases, instead the same rules apply to all cases heard by the SAC. In the sessions of the SAC, cases are decided upon presentation by a Referendary who has been in charge of preparing the case. Case categories are assigned to Referendaries according to their expertise. When the preparation of the case is complete, the Referendary brings the case to a court session. The Judges that will participate in the decision-making are determined on the basis of a pre-drawn sessions plan. When the sessions plan is drawn up, Referendaries are asked what kind of cases they are planning to bring to session, and, as a rule, the sessions plan is drawn up in such a manner that the cases which will be brought to session will be heard by Judges with relevant expertise. However, in principle, any and all Judges of the SAC may hear all kinds of cases.

It is, however, noteworthy that the composition of the SAC includes two Expert Judges on the Environment having competence in the relevant field in cases: 1) referred to in the Water Act; 2) referred to in the Environmental Protection Act; 3) referred to in the Act on the Organisation of River Basin Management and the Marine Strategy and 4) concerning certain exceptions laid down in the Nature Conservation Act (exception to the prohibition on destruction and deterioration of natural habitats and exceptions to species protection provisions) that are substantially related to a project or activity referred to in the Environmental Protection Act or the Water Act and that are decided in the same procedure. The qualification requirements for Expert Counsellors on the Environment are a relevant master's degree in the field of technology or natural sciences. In addition, he or she must be familiar with the tasks falling within the scope of applicable legislation.

In addition, the composition of the SAC includes two Expert Judges also in cases concerning certain intellectual property rights, i.e. patents, utility model rights or integrated circuit designs. The qualification requirements for Chief Engineering Counsellors are a relevant master's degree in the field of technology. In addition, he or she must be familiar with patent matters.

An Expert Judge is independent in the same way as a Judge when exercising judicial power. The same duties and responsibilities apply.

B7. Does your court provide any training for judges?

Partially

| The SAC does provide some training for its staff, however mainly on cross-cutting themes and not specifically in themes relevant for deciding cases of economic importance. The main source of training for judges is the National Courts Administration which provides a limited selection of courses in eg different fields of law or cross-cutting skills (eg analysis of financial statements) on a yearly rotating basis. Judges also attend external training organised eg by universities or commercial actors both as participants and trainers. |

| Under the Legal Aid Act, legal aid is provided at the expense of the state to persons who need expert assistance in a legal matter and who are unable to meet the costs of proceedings as a result of their economic situation. The Act specifically details that legal aid is not provided to a company or a corporation. However, entrepreneurs (sole traders) may be granted legal aid in respect of court matters related to their business. The provision of legal aid is in principle means-tested. |

| Under the Administrative Judicial Procedure Act, the court that annuls a decision may at the same time order a continued compliance with the annulled decision until a new decision is made in the matter, or until the decision of the court is final or a court considering the matter otherwise orders. However, this provision is of a general application and not specifically related to the aim of limiting economic disruption or market effects.                                                 |

| The administrative and tax litigation chamber of the High Court of Cassation and Justice has jurisdiction to rule on administrative disputes, which may also include disputes with significant economic impact. The court's jurisdiction is determined by the legal nature of the contested act, the status of the parties involved, or the subject matter of the dispute. The substantive jurisdiction of the administrative and tax and litigation chamber of the High Court of Cassation and Justice is established mainly in accordance with the provisions of Article 10(1) of the Administrative Litigation Law No. 554/2004, but also with other special legal provisions that expressly provide for the jurisdiction of the administrative court in various matters either as an appellate court or as a court of first instance in cases provided by law. Thus, according to the general rule, the HCCJ deals with appeals against decisions handed down by courts of appeal concerning administrative acts that cannot be assessed in monetary terms issued by central public authorities or those concerning taxes and duties, contributions, customs duties, and their accessories exceeding 3,000,000 lei (approximately 600,000 euros), being therefore relevant for establishing jurisdiction, as the case may be, either the rank of the authority or the value threshold. It should also be noted that, in accordance with the provisions of Article 126(3) of the Romanian Constitution, the High Court of Cassation and Justice ensures the uniform interpretation and application of the law by the judicial courts. In order to achieve the goal of preventing and resolving divergences in case-law, the law has provided the High Court with two mechanisms for unifying judicial practice, namely: -the appeal in the interest of the law, regulated in Articles 514-518 of the Code of Civil Procedure, respectively: -the referral for a preliminary ruling on questions of law, as regulated by the provisions of Articles 519-521 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this respect, the appeal in the interest of the law represents the procedural mechanism for unifying judicial practice, which gives expression to the constitutional role of the supreme court in ensuring the uniform interpretation and application of the law by all courts. Furthermore, referring a matter for a preliminary ruling to resolve questions of law is the procedural mechanism for preventing the emergence of inconsistent judicial practice. The decisions of the supreme court in these cases are binding on the courts, and the legal issues subject to review and interpretation by the High Court of Cassation and Justice may concern any matter, as long as the conditions of admissibility specific to the two mechanisms are met (regardless of whether the issue concerns matters over which the HCCJ does not generally have jurisdiction). Therefore, regulations with economic impact, as indicated in the introductory section, may also be subject to uniform interpretation and application of the law. |

| Specifically with regard to administrative contracts, the administrative litigation instance has jurisdiction to hear disputes arising in the stages prior to the conclusion of an administrative contract, as well as any disputes related to the conclusion of the administrative contract, including disputes concerning the annulment of an administrative contract. To the extent that such disputes are dealt with on the merits by the courts of appeal, the High Court of Cassation and Justice will have jurisdiction to rule on the appeal. Disputes arising from the performance of administrative contracts fall within the jurisdiction of the ordinary civil courts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| In essence, the examples provided in question A.10 are excluded from the jurisdiction of the High Court of Cassation and Justice, given that they are typically issued by local public authorities and, in this case, disputes are not dealt with on appeal by the High Court of Cassation and Justice. However, for environmental permits in the energy sector, telecommunications, permits to market certain medicines, tax warehouse permits in connection with the sale of excise goods, the HCCJ may have jurisdiction as the appellate court in cases where these types of disputes have been settled on the merits by the courts of appeal (taking into account either the rank of the authority that issued the contested authorization/act, the value criterion, or other special regulations, as the case may be).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| With regard to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Cassation and Justice (HCCJ) to deal with these types of challenges, we would like to point out that the time limit for challenging in this situation is to be considered a remedy, specifically, we refer to the appeal lodged against the court decision issued by the court of appeal insofar as the disputed administrative act was issued by a central public authority in the exercise of public power, in order to organize the enforcement of the law or the actual enforcement of the law. The aspects of ordinary law concerning the jurisdiction of the administrative and tax litigation chamber of the High Court of Cassation and Justice are fully applicable to disputes concerning the legality of administrative acts relating to reference prices or the methods of setting prices. Specific examples include administrative acts issued by the National Energy Regulatory Authority, acts issued by the National Authority for Administration and Regulation in Communications, etc.                                                                      |

| The clarifications in point A.14 are also applicable, with the mention that the contested administrative sanctioning act is an individual administrative act targeting a specific private entity. In this regard, we note that the acts issued by the national regulatory authorities may also establish financial penalties, with the administrative and tax litigation chamber of the High Court of Cassation and Justice conducting, as part of its judicial review, an analysis of the legality of the penalty, including from the perspective of the proportionality of the amount of the penalty.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| According to the Administrative Code, disputes arising in connection with the assignment, conclusion, execution, modification, and termination of concession contracts for public property, as well as those concerning the award of damages, shall be settled in accordance with the provisions of the legislation on administrative litigation. In the practice of the High Court of Cassation and Justice, disputes have been settled concerning, among other things, the annulment of concession contracts for the exploitation of agricultural land, non-agricultural land, and fishery facilities, concession agreements for oil exploration, development, and exploitation areas, or the exploitation of sand and gravel resources.However, according to Law No. 101/2016 on remedies and appeals in the field of public procurement contracts, sectoral contracts, and works and services concession contracts, as well as on the organization and functioning of the National Council for the Settlement of Appeals, lower courts have jurisdiction over disputes concerning works and services concession contracts. |

A26. Is your court competent to rule on actions taken against private persons responsible for providing an industrial and commercial public service?

No

A27. Is your jurisdiction competent to rule on the legality of administrative actions that exclude an enterprise from the benefits of national or European public financing (not constituting State aid)?

Yes

INSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURE AND SPECIALIZATION

B1. If your court deals with business-related cases or cases of economic importance, it acts...

Sometimes as a court of appeal and sometimes as a court of first and last instance

B2. Please explain.

As already mentioned, the High Court of Cassation and Justice's jurisdiction in administrative litigation is mainly that of an appellate court and only a court of first instance in certain cases provided for by law.

B3. Are there specialised chambers or thematic divisions for business-related cases or cases of economic importance in your court?

Sometimes

B4. Please explain.

According to the provisions of Law No. 304/2022 on judicial organization, republished, with subsequent amendments and additions, Romania has a single supreme court called the High Court of Cassation and Justice, whose jurisdictional activity is organized into several chambers, depending on the jurisdiction established by law. Thus, within the HCCJ there are: the First Civil Chamber; the Second Civil Chamber; the Criminal Chamber; the Administrative and tax litigation Chamber; and the United Chambers. Specifically, there are no other specialized sections or subdivisions within the administrative and tax litigation chamber. We also consider it necessary to mention that disputes in the field of intellectual property and commerce, although not falling within the jurisdiction of the administrative and tax litigation chamber of the High Court of Cassation and Justice, they are heard by two other chambers of the High Court, namely the First Civil Chamber for intellectual property disputes and the Second Civil Chamber for commercial disputes (involving professionals). This last category includes disputes involving small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), for which we provide examples of disputes settled by the Second Civil Division in the case of SMEs:

- ☒ Disputes concerning contractual civil liability (in particular, disputes arising from the conclusion of framework guarantee agreements concluded with the National Credit Guarantee Fund for Small and Medium-sized Enterprises S.A. IFN, regarding its guarantee, as guarantor, of the repayment obligations of individual loans granted to SME beneficiaries, within a guarantee ceiling approved by the Fund, under the terms of the Notifications of inclusion in the guarantee ceiling);
- ☒ Disputes concerning civil liability in tort;
- ☒ Corporate law disputes;
- ☒ Disputes concerning property rights (actions for recovery of property, actions for damages);
- ☒ Disputes related to the privatization of commercial companies;
- ☒ Disputes related to electricity price compensation schemes introduced as a result of the energy crisis and the prolonged conflict in Ukraine;
- ☒ Disputes concerning the rights of property owners affected by energy infrastructure (power lines, gas pipelines).

B6. The allocation of cases to panels of judges is done randomly, using a computerised system based on the ECRIS programme. This allocation is based on certain configuration parameters, including the maximum number of new cases admitted per panel, the cumulative complexity of new cases admitted per hearing, the stage of proceedings, and the subject matter of the cases being heard. The individual specialization of the judge is not a distinct criterion for the distribution of cases within the same chamber, given that in legal matters falling within the competence of that chamber, the judges within it are equally specialized.

| Continuing professional training activities are mainly carried out by the National Institute of Magistracy, the judges of the High Court being largely involved as trainers in the courses organized, given the professional experience gained by a High Court judge. One of the objectives of the High Court of Cassation and Justice is to expand judicial dialogue and comply with common standards with other supreme courts, in which regard the High Court is strengthening its involvement in international exchange programs for magistrates and the mutual dissemination of case-law within the various international networks and associations to which it is a member. |

| We would like to point out that the High Court of Cassation and Justice has a body of assistant magistrates who assist judges in preparing and resolving cases, drafting draft decisions, documentation, verifying procedures, and ensuring the necessary legal research. The assistant magistrate participates in court hearings and has an advisory vote in the deliberations of the panel of judges. |

| The essential conditions for suspending an administrative act, according to Administrative Litigation Law No. 554/2004, are: the existence of a well-founded case that raises serious doubts about the legality of the act and the prevention of imminent harm to the injured party. Imminent harm means future and foreseeable material damage or, as the case may be, foreseeable serious disruption to the functioning of a public authority or public service. These conditions must be met simultaneously, and the request must be addressed urgently. We specify that the claim for suspension may be submitted after a prior complaint has been filed before the public authority that issued the act or before the higher authority, and it is also mandatory to lodge an action for the annulment of the administrative act whose suspension has been requested. |

| According to the general rule provided by Administrative Litigation Law No. 554/2004, no financial guarantee is required for the suspension of an administrative act. However, special regulations, such as those governing the suspension of tax acts, have additionally regulated the condition of paying a security deposit. The High Court of Cassation and Justice does not directly order the establishment of security deposits, given its competence as an appellate court.                                                                                                  |

| In essence, electronic submission involves the transmission and registration of documents in electronic format, including proof of payment of the court stamp duty. In addition, there is also a digital tool called the electronic file, an application that allows the parties to the case to view the documents in the file in electronic format and allows the court to communicate the procedural documents in electronic format. Other available digital tools include legislative programs that allow access to documentation resources, along with legislation and case-law. |

| In order to benefit from legal aid, individuals must follow the procedure regulated by Emergency Ordinance No. 51/2008 on legal aid in civil matters, as subsequently amended and supplemented. According to the provisions of Article 6 of the aforementioned normative act, legal aid may be granted in the form of payment of fees for representation, legal assistance, and, where appropriate, defense by an appointed or chosen lawyer, for the realization or protection of a right or legitimate interest in justice or for the prevention of a dispute. Any individual may request legal aid if they are unable to meet the costs of a trial or those involved in obtaining legal advice in order to defend a right or legitimate interest in justice, without jeopardizing their own livelihood or that of their family. Thus, persons whose average net monthly income per family member in the last two months prior to submitting the request is below the equivalent of 25% of the national minimum gross salary are eligible for this benefit. In this case, the amounts constituting legal aid are fully advanced by the state. Additionally, legal aid is granted in other situations, proportionality to the applicant's needs, if the certain or estimated costs of the proceedings are such as to limit their effective access to justice, in relation to their income and proven expenses, including due to differences in the cost of living between the Member State in which the applicant resides or has their habitual residence and Romania. At the same time, we mention that the court may grant legal aid to non-profit legal entities based in Romania, only when, in the cases and conditions provided for exclusively by law, without justifying a personal interest, they act to defend the rights or legitimate interests of persons in special situations or, as the case may be, for the purpose of protecting a group or general interest. In this case, legal aid may be granted when the court considers that, in view of the economic and financial situation of these non-profit legal entities, the costs of the proceedings would significantly affect their current activity. |

| In principle, the court rules within the limits of its jurisdiction, and we emphasize that an appeal is not a devolutive remedy. Also, as a general observation, the effects of the court decision are limited to the parties to the case, except where the subject matter of the case is a normative administrative act, in which case the decision to annul the act will have erga omnes effects after publication of the decision in the Official Gazette of Romania.                   |

| As a general rule, the court may, as appropriate, annul the administrative act in whole or in part, order the public authority to issue an administrative act, release another document, or perform a specific administrative operation. It should be noted that the court will also rule on compensation for material and moral damages caused, if the claimant has requested this. The court may also set, by its ruling, an execution deadline, at the request of the interested party. |

Please illustrate.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Section 40 para 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure stipulates that recourse to the administrative courts may be had in all public-law disputes of a non-constitutional nature insofar as the disputes are not explicitly allocated to another court by a federal statute.                                                                                                                                                 |
| According to the so-called "modified subject theory" a legal norm belongs to the sphere of public law if it exclusively entitles or obligates a public authority. Any dispute arising from its application is therefore a public-law-dispute.                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

| According to Section 54 of the German Administrative Procedure Act a legal relationship under public law may be constituted, amended or annulled by agreement (agreement under public law) in so far as this is not contrary to legal provision. In particular, the authority may, instead of issuing an administrative act, conclude an agreement under public law with the person to whom it would otherwise direct the administrative act. |

INSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURE AND SPECIALIZATION

B1. If your court deals with business-related cases or cases of economic importance, it acts...

Sometimes as a court of appeal and sometimes as a court of first and last instance

B2. Please explain.

The Federal Administrative Court is, in principle, a court with the purpose of unifying and standardizing the law in Germany. Therefore, it is primarily designed to answer questions of law, which may arise from the (differing) jurisprudence of the fifteen higher administrative courts in the federal states. In addition, the legislator has created a first-and-last instance competence of the Federal Administrative Court in enumerated fields of law. According to Section 50 para 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure the Federal Administrative Court rules at first and last instance on

1. public law disputes of a non-constitutional nature between the Federation and the Länder, and between individual Länder,
2. actions brought against prohibitions of associations made by the Federal Minister of the Interior, Building and Community under section 3 (2) no. 2 of the Associations Act, and directions issued under section 8 (2) sentence 1 of the Associations Act,
3. regarding disputes against deportation orders in accordance with section 58a of the Residence Act (Aufenthaltsgesetz), and their implementation,
4. actions arising from dossiers within the ambit of the Federal Intelligence Service,
5. actions against measures and decisions in accordance with section 12 (3a) of the Members of the Bundestag Act (Abgeordnetengesetz), in accordance with the provisions of Part 11 of the Members of the Bundestag Act, in accordance with section 6b of the Federal Ministers Act (Bundesministertgesetz), and in accordance with section 7 of the Act on the Legal Relationships of Parliamentary State Secretaries (Gesetz über die Rechtsverhältnisse der Parlamentarischen Staatssekretäre) in conjunction with section 6b of the Federal Ministers Act,
6. all and any disputes related to project approval and plan approval procedures for projects designated in the General Rail Act (Allgemeines Eisenbahngesetz), the Federal Waterways Act (Bundeswasserstraßengesetz), the Transmission Line Extension Act (Energieleitungsausbaugesetz), the Federal Requirement Plan Act (Bundesbedarfsplangesetz), section 43e (4) of the Energy Industry Act (Energiewirtschaftsgesetz), section 76 (1) of the Offshore Wind Farming Act (Windenergie-auf-See-Gesetz), or the Magnetic Suspension Train Planning Act (Magnetschwebbahnplanungsgesetz), concerning all and any disputes regarding proceedings within the meaning of section 17e (1) of the Federal Highways Act (Bundesfernstraßengesetz), concerning all and any disputes regarding projects to construct and connect terminals for importing hydrogen and derivatives thereof, as well as concerning the procedures allocated thereto in accordance with the Act to Accelerate the Use of LNG (LNG-Beschleunigungsgesetz),
7. the proceedings allocated to it in accordance with the Act on Safeguarding Energy Supplies (Energiesicherungsgesetz).

B3. Are there specialised chambers or thematic divisions for business-related cases or cases of economic importance in your court?

Yes

B5. Are there any special rules regarding the case assignment to individual judges for business-related cases or cases of economic importance (based on their case-load, backlog, experience etc.)?

N/A

B7. Does your court provide any training for judges?

No

B9[SQ001]. How is the training carried out? [Internally (in-house training)]

N/A

B9[SQ002]. How is the training carried out? [Externally (training agencies, universities etc.)]

B20. Please explain.

Section 87c para 1 of the Code of Administrative Court Procedure stipulates that proceedings in accordance with Section 50 para 1 no. 6 of the Code of Administrative Court Procedure, are to be executed with priority and expedited. This includes big infrastructure projects, i.e. railway tracks, federal waterways, extra-high voltage transmission lines, offshore windfarms, magnetic suspension trains, federal highways as well as projects to construct and connect terminals for importing hydrogen and derivatives thereof. Proceedings are to be particularly prioritised concerning projects where a federal statute determines that they are in the overriding public interest.

According to Section 87c para 2 of the Code of Administrative Court the presiding judge or reporting judge, in the proceedings designated in para 1, is to summon the parties concerned in suitable cases to attend an early initial hearing in order to discuss the facts and the dispute, and in order to bring about an amicable resolution of the legal dispute. In the event that no amicable resolution of the legal dispute is reached at this hearing, the presiding judge or reporting judge discusses with the parties concerned the further stages of the proceedings, and the potential setting of a date for the oral hearing.

| According to section 80 para 5 sentence 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure the court dealing with the main case may, on request, completely or partly order or reconstitute the suspensive effect of an action against an administrative act. This is based on a preliminary examination of the prospects of success in the main proceedings. If the factual and legal situation cannot be fully established during the temporary relief proceedings, the decision shall be based on a weighing of the parties' interests, with the aim of preventing any factual prejudice to the main proceedings. According to section 123 para 1 sentence 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure the court may, on request, make an interim order in relation to the subject-matter of the dispute, even prior to the lodging of an action, if the danger exists that the enforcement of a right of the plaintiff could be prevented or considerably impeded by means of an alteration of the existing state. According to section 123 para 1 sentence 2 of the German Code of Administrative Court interim orders are also permissible to settle an interim condition in relation to a contentious legal relationship if this regulation appears necessary, above all with ongoing legal relationships, in order to avert major disadvantages or prevent immanent force, or for other reasons. According to section 123 para 5 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure the provisions contained in para 1 do not apply to cases falling under sections 80. |

| According to Section 166 para 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure combined with Section 114 para 1 of the German Code of Civil Procedure any parties who, due to their personal and economic circumstances, are unable to pay the costs of litigation, or are able to so pay them only in part or only as instalments, will be granted assistance with the court costs upon filing a corresponding application, provided that the action they intend to bring or their defence against an action that has been brought against them has sufficient prospects of success and does not seem frivolous. This applies to individuals. Furthermore, according to Section 166 para 1 of the German Code of Administrative Court Procedure combined with Section 116 no. 2 of the German Code of Civil Procedure upon corresponding application being made, assistance with court costs shall be approved for parties: Who are a legal person or an organisation that has the capacity to be a party and that was established in Germany, in another Member State of the European Union, or in any other signatory state of the Agreement on the European Economic Area, and which have their registered seat there, if the costs cannot be funded by that party nor by the parties economically involved in the subject matter in dispute, and if any failure to bring an action or to defend against an action that has been brought would contradict the public interest. |
